CUPID: Sure! Arsenic, strychnine—take your pick. I aim to please.

GIRL: Verr-ry funny. But you know darn well you're not aiming to please me! Huh—and the folder said, "Cupid always gladdening the days at Mountain View Inn"...

CUPID: Now wait a minute! You go around looking like the meanest trick of the week, and you expect me to—Look, cookie, try smiling at men for a change!

GIRL: It'd be a change for the worse. My smile's the original tattle-tale gray. I brush my teeth, mind you—

CUPID: Don't mind me. Just answer this: Do you see "pink" on your tooth-brush?

GIRL: Well—

CUPID: Well, that's a warning to see your dentist—but pronto! Let him decide what's wrong. Maybe it's just a case of soft foods robbing your gums of exercise—and if so, he'll probably suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Please try to concentrate. We were speaking of my smile.

CUPID: First things first, feather-brain. Sparkling smiles depend largely on healthy gums. And Ipana's designed not only to clean teeth but, with gentle massage, to help gums. So if your dentist suggests massage with Ipana, then massage with Ipana, Sis...and you'll be started on a smile that'll slay the men—the way you want 'em slayed!
"LIVING IN A BIG WAY" is not a bad idea.

It involves embracing life. Recommended for those who like embracing.

M-G-M's new musical, "Living in a Big Way" will make you merrier. It may make you live in an even bigger way.

Gene Kelly and Marie McDonald are the "Boy-meets-Girl" of this hearty, happy picture.

Gene is the sliniest dancer—the best "timer" of scenes—and, to our and the public's mind, one of the very top stars in pictures. He has never been better, not even in "Anchors Aweigh". How the boy can dance!

What originality characterizes his dance plots! The scene in which he does a terpsichorean routine on the girders of an unfinished dream-house is worth your week's movielowance.

He teeters on a block and tackle, totters on ladders, sure-footed, sure-fire Gene!

Marie McDonald has been bruited about a bit in the columns. She is known as "The Body". Her curves are classic and where she walks one hears a whistle.

In addition to Gene and Marie, you will see Charles Winninger, Phyllis Thaxter, Spring Byington, and others.

Gregory La Cava, the director, is also the author, collaborating with Irving Ravetch. Pandro S. Berman, one of our better producers, is the producer.

When William James, the philosopher, was asked, "Is life worth living?" he said, "It all depends on the liver!"

And if the liver is "living in a big way", then life has its worth. So roareth the lion among philosophers—

Great Expectations (Universal-International)

LET your expectations rise as high as they want—you'll not be disappointed for even a single moment in this film that's based on the Dickens novel. It has all the Dickensian moods and turns and twists of plot that you'd expect; you'll relish them all right up to the last exciting moment.

This is about Pip, a "young man of great expectations," who falls heir to a fortune from an anonymous patron and goes to live in London. He's just a blacksmith's apprentice, but he takes to London life with the greatest of ease and sees in it the chance to win the fair hand of his childhood playmate Valerie Hobson. The mystery of his patron—as well as the mystery in Valerie's life—will take you from the foggy English marshes to life in the Temple, the London courts and a gruelling scene in a deserted old English country house.

The first scene sets the mood and when we tell you that most of the audience screams involuntarily you'll get a good idea of the very excellent type of filmmaking you'll find in this laurel-winner.

Your Reviewer Says: You'll hold on to your seat.

Perils of Pauline (Paramount)

TAKE along a bag of peanuts and the biggest laugh you own. The laugh you'll need almost constantly; the peanuts are just to put you in the mood of the picture—a marvelous mood that takes you back to the old nickelodeon days when Pearl White as the serial heroine Pauline got rescued once a week from the wicked villain as the piano played madly on.

Pauline is back again and Betty Hutton has her. It's this bundle of blonde energy that takes over the role of Pearl, the little stage-struck girl who walks right into the lead of the famous early-day thriller. This is Hutton's meat; she does it up brown with every trick in her raucous category going to make for some of the best fun you've ever had at a movie. Backing her up are Billy De Wolfe, a genuine sort of a gagster, John Lund and veterans William Demarest and Constance Collier to flavor this old-time dish.

Pauline does just about everything and the movie has just about everything, too. Its scenes of the first films in the making are something to paste up in your album with great big gold stars.

If this one doesn't make you laugh, you're lost.

Your Reviewer Says: Go yourself and take everybody.

The Sin of Harold Diddlebock (California-UA)

HAROLD LLOYD and his horn-rimmed glasses come out of retirement and set up active business again as motion-picture entertainers. How entertained you'll be depends on how you react to Lloyd and his impetuous solemnity; also to the idea of people dangling from skyscrapers attached to a lion. Yes, that's what we said—attached to a lion. His name is Jackie and he's Lloyd's most efficient prop.

Forget common sense and you may have an uncommonly good time if you can imagine one Harold Diddlebock, a worn-out bookkeeper, taking to the bottle and buying a circus. There are some funny scenes, some not so funny and some downright silly, but Lloyd's there all the time, playing away for dear life. One Frances Ramsden, a new and provocative personality, is the heroine, but she doesn't have much to do. Jimmy Conlin, Raymond Walburn and Franklin Pangborn fill in some comedy spots and Arline Judge adds her bit to the fun. The rest is all handled by the maestro himself and if you feel as silly as he looks, the picture's all yours.

Your Reviewer Says: Sin without punishment.

✓ Down to Earth (Columbia)

SOME people “up there” may get a little annoyed one of these days if Hollywood keeps bringing celestial stars down to earth. This time, it’s Rita Hayworth—paragon of the Muse, Terpsichore, who gets Mr. Jordan to let her come wafting down with Messenger Edward Everett Horton.

Larry Parks is the reason—he’s putting on a musical in which the muses sing such songs as were never heard in Greek mythology and Rita’s pretty mad about it. Once on earth she gets things her own way, which means the show’s a flop and gangster George Macready will shoot Larry. But here comes Mr. Jordan—again—he’s distinguished Roland Culver will shoot Larry. But here comes Mr. Jordan—again—it’s a flop and gangster George Macready will shoot Larry. But here comes Mr. Jordan—again—

The Broadway background is, of course, the cue for lots of songs, dances, Technicolor costumes and big sparkly sets. Rita is certainly just the ticket to portray a heavenly creature and James Gleason as her manager has had just enough practice to be able to deal deftly with a Muse. Larry Parks looks sincere and able as ever; unfortunately he’s no owlet right makes up the picture by the song-and-dance acts.

Shots of white airplanes full of spirits heading upward into the unknown still make us a little nervous, more than we start to squirm. When all this earthly merry-making and torch-singing are going on at the same time.

Your Reviewer Says: Glitter, glitter, little ghost.

Honeymoon (RKO)

THIS is on the fantastic side, but the trouble is it’s not possible to be fantasy. Rather, it’s obviously designed to be a winner starring Shirley Temple and Guy Madison, with Franchot Tone playing their sophisticated sponsor. Shirley looks trim and Madison handsome. Tone looks mostly harried, which might be expected from any actor trying to keep up with the haphazard happenings of a film that’s merely a futile attempt at fun.

Shirley’s Minnesota girl who’s supposed to meet and marry Madison in Mexico City; she misses him but finds vice-consul Tone. Lina Romay has previously discovered Shirley, so naturally she resents this, as does the audience when things keep going on and on and Shirley and Guy are no nearer getting married than they were two reels before.

There are lots of shots of Mexican background with flowers and sarapes and upper-class garden parties, but this doesn’t make a picture. Both Shirley and Guy act a little as though they were repeating lines they’d heard the day before. You have an idea they’d only let loose and themselves everything might pick up. But then, they have such silly things to do—as long as they do—it probably never would have a chance to make this anything but a lame effort.

Your Reviewer Says: Nothing good doing here.

✓ The Trouble with Women (Paramount)

WHO’S “dabbling” now? Teresa Wright, a newspaper reporter, says it’s Ralph Millard, a psychology professor who’s getting into a lot of ladies’ hair by claiming they should be shaved around more. But it really looks as though Paramount has done the dabbling what with matching the Wright-Millard talent, plus a touch of Brian Donlevy, in a film that’s just a time-passer.

Take the story—a light little touch about a girl reporter who’s after a story from a publicized professor. She enrolls in his class; he thinks she’s a cute little student and pretty soon in comes love. The big bad wolf is shouting city editor Donlevy who wants his girl.

It all sounds fairly amusing, and it is fairly. But all the contrived little funny business seems to be an echo of bigger and better comedies and though the dialogue gives off an occasional spark there’s still the feeling that Ray and Teresa are too grown up to be playing around this way.

Yvonne De Carlo acts as though she really was a burlesque dancer, which is a great pick-up, seeing as how everyone else is just sort of kidding around.

Your Reviewer Says: Women have been in better trouble than this.

The Homestretch (20th Century-Fox)

THE homestretch is the best part of this trage story. Don’t get us wrong—it’s “tragic” oriosa instead, as is the color of all the famous tracks. Maureen O’Hara, looking lush in lush outfits, and Cornel Wilde lag along for half the picture, not acting well enough to make the audience want to move. Play is less than great.

Then the film gets a shot in the arm that carries it along fairly well; by the time the homestretch is reached in the last race, it’s ready to take its place as a fair picture. A gentle Bostonian like Maureen should not have listened to the wiles of race-track follower Wilde. She knew she shouldn’t all the time, when she sees he’s a low-down crook, but in conniving Helen Walker, she just packs her bags and leaves for home. This is where everything picks up, since the life has just been a series of would-be romantic moments, which quite came off. When the film gets down to concentrating on the horses and Wilde’s reform you can begin to sit up and take a little notice.

Cornel Wilde is wasted; he just doesn’t belong here, acting like a hare-brained wastrel. James Gleason looks in now and then trying to make it all worthwhile. There are love scenes and beautiful clothes, but it’s still a jittery off-the-track film.

Your Reviewer Says: Loses by more than a nose.

✓ The Adventuress (Eagle-Lion)

THIS is the Deborah Kerr who’s going to take over Clark Gable in “The Hucksters.” If you want an idea of how she’s going to go about it, just watch her take over this slightly incredible story and make high entertainment of it.

She’s the little Irish Bridie who wants to be a big black rebel. She can’t manage that directly, so lets herself be taken in by a German spy and there she is caught in a lot of trouble about a little black book that presumably is the key to the fate of the Allies.

But never mind the plot; just watch the picture and Deborah. She acts with a finished naughtiness that makes every incident a shiver of suspense. Trevor Howard, whom you may remember from “Night Train,” goes right along with her. The British flavor, her nicely finished Irish accent and the sly little humor that comes grinning in all the time and then make this a star that’s worth robbing your piggy bank to see.

Your Reviewer Says: Out for a good time.

Blaze of Noon (Paramount)

They're flying the mail again, but this time they have a new angle that's an interest-getter. The cast is an interest-getter, too—to wit, Anne Baxter, William Holden, Bill Bendix, Sonny Tufts and Sterling Hayden. The picture marks the first appearance of Holden and Hayden since their war days. It's a story about the first mail planes in the days when pilots still had the yen to sweep low and frighten the chickens.

There are four flying brothers who sign up as mail pilots. You know something's bound to happen to some of them—especially after you get a good look at those open-cockpit planes. That's the one trouble with this—you're sitting and waiting every minute for big black tragedy to strike, so that when it does you're just not up to being as shocked as you should be.

Anne Baxter, as Holden's wife, who puts up with the strain of his job—plus all his brothers' belongings strewn around her room—makes everything consistent, Bendix, Tufts and Holden don't try to steal scenes from each other, either, which makes for a good movie. You'll get excited about the flying sequences; also by that pretty blonde Poppy (Jean Wallace); and you'll certainly breathe a big sigh every time that mail does come through.

Your Reviewer Says: Good people; good film.

Christmas Eve (Bogeaus-UA)

Every so often there comes along a film that makes everyone wonder just why it was produced. "Christmas Eve" is such a movie. It has George Raft, George Brent, Randolph Scott, Jean Blondell and Ann Harding to head its cast; they might as well have spent their time knitting for all the good they've done in this.

The plot is incredibly confused—old lady Ann Harding, who tries her best to talk with a squeak and walk with a cane, has three foster sons—Raft, Brent and Scott. She's in trouble and needs them and she's sure they'll come to her on Christmas Eve. Getting them there involves some terrible suffering for the audience. First of all, they have to watch Brent and Blondell make fools of themselves in some "playboy" sequences; then they have to watch Raft shoot it out with a bad German down in South America, after which Virginia Field expires in his arms. The final blow is the adventures of Scott, who steals some babies with the help of Dolores Moran.

After all this, everybody walks in calm-

Peter Lawford, home again, shares chow and laughs with piquant Terry Austin at Chantecclair restaurant ly on Christmas Eve. The only pleasant thing there seemed to be in this was Dolores Moran’s dimple.

Your Reviewer Says: Take it away.

✓ The Other Love (Enterprise-UA)

From a sanitarium in the Alps to the fabulous life of the Riviera jumps this woman’s picture, with Barbara Stanwyck pulling the strings as the pianist of Erich Maria Remarque’s novel. Up on the mountain top lie health for her and the love of doctor David Niven; down in bad old Monte Carlo is certain death, masquerading in a champagne glass and the love making of Richard Conte, which certainly would be enough to make any girl disobey her doctor’s orders.

This all goes to make up a good old fashioned “drawing room” movie, with plenty of glitter around the edges. The accent goes to the love-and-romance note rather than to Stanwyck’s personal tragedy; the film turns out to be a surface picture that’s not in the least emotionally disturbing. If it had gone a little deeper, there would have been lots of tears shed; as it is, nothing rings the bell loudly enough—neither Stanwyck’s love for her music, Niven’s love for her, nor her desperate attempt to escape her date with death.

Richard Conte is a tall and handsome temptation; Joan Lorring makes a nice Celestine; and Gilbert Roland is there, too, to look darkly impassioned. It’s a “romantic” movie that should have been played as tragedy and wasn’t.

Your Reviewer Says: Fair enough.

✓ Children on Trial (English Films)

England shares her juvenile delinquency problems with America in this documentary about the reformation of two slum children through “approved schools.” The court procedure of commitment of the children, their actual training in the schools and the two sample cases are shown realistically with enough punch to hit home for both parents and children.

You see the patient efforts of the magistrates and the reform-school workers to bring the children to a clearer view of their own lives, to correct their mistakes subtly and then to send them out with the promise of better citizenship.

The point that's driven home is the family life from which the "bad" children spring, and the fact that it is sometimes middle-class parents who do most harm to their children. As another shot in the arm of the juvenile delinquency problem, this will do very well.

Your Reviewer Says: Straight stuff on delinquency.

The Egg and I (Universal)

This is a disappointment. Any resemblance in this mediocre film to the fund-raising characters of the best-seller must have gotten there by mistake.

For instance, Claudette Colbert is a chic, well-groomed Betty. She can wallow in mud, scrub floors and fall off a roof and still emerge looking ready to model country clothes for Vogue. The rowdy Kettles of the book have degenerated into a slapped-happy pair with, heavens above, a handsome clean young son who works hard so he can go to college! The final sin is the dragging in, via shining station wagon, of blonde Louise Allbritton, who owns a million-dollar farm down the road and is on the make for Bob.

The farm looks a little broken-down and deserted—that is, just for a moment. But before you can get a second look, it's all cleaned up, shiny, comfortable and anything but the deserted patch of wilderness that Betty-of-the-book had to contend with. Bob is an affable and charming Fred MacMurray who likes to get dressed up in tails, have dinner with his wife by candlelight and pretend they're at Twenty-one!

This should be enough to warn you that this isn't "The Egg and I." It's two other movies—neither of them good. Marjorie Main as Ma Kettle does manage to salvage a piece of wit here and there; the forest fire, the Indians, Stove are present but for all the fun they are as well as might as well have been omitted.

Your Reviewer Says: The omelet fell.

The Woman on the Beach (RKO)

If this is a sample of what's happening to the "wicked ladies" of the current cycle, they better pack them all up and put them away on the shelf. Joan Bennett makes a fine Mrs. Macomber, but she had something sensible to work with there. Now she's supposed to be a man-aner who slinks along a lonely beach making rendezvous with Coast Guarder Robert Ryan in the deserted wreck of a war-ghost ship.

Since Ryan has a bad case of war nerves, this living in the shadows with a married woman just isn't good for him. Wouldn't you think he'd snap out of it and go back to that nice Nan Leslie who was all set to marry him before Joan sneaked in. To complicate things, there's Charles Bickford, the husband, who does some excellent work in the demanding role of a blind man.

Things get steadily more muddled with all sorts of impossible dialogue and impossible happenings filtering in with the fog until you just want to push everybody over the cliff. This had a chance, with Ryan, Bennett and Bickford there to help, but it got too confused with its own neurotic idea.

Your Reviewer Says: Psychology goes haywire.
Yankee Fakir (Republic)

THIS "Fakir" must have snuck in when nobody was looking. He's of no consequence, anyway, so it really won't matter. Douglas Fowley is called upon to play him—a traveling pitchman, Yankee Davis, who comes with his partner to a small Arizona town, takes a room in Joan Woodbury's house and then takes a hand in trying to solve the murder of her father. It would have been much easier just to have washed his hands of the whole thing, bundled up Joan and her kid brother and taken them out of the town. This way, he has to get Clem Bevans to dress up and play his millionaire uncle who's offering a prize to the chap who'll expose the worst scoundrel in town. Douglas naively thinks this will smoke out the murderer, but all that does come floating in is some pretty bad movie-making.

You see only the back of the villain's head until the end of the picture but you knew all along who he was. You can guess just about everything that will happen too, so you might as well stay home.

Your Reviewer Says: Big faker.

Copacabana (Coslow-UA)

GROUCHO MARX stalks through this, accompanied by zippy Carmen Miranda. If they're enough to entertain you, then entertained you will be because that's about all there is to the picture.

Groucho pretends he's an agent for Carmen and gets so intrigued with the idea he sells her double to the famous Copacabana club. This means she wiggles through a South American act, then rushes away to simmer in a veil as one Mlle. Fiji. Even Steve Cochran who runs the place is fooled.

That's the plot—dressed up by a glimpse of fourteen "Copa Girls," the brief appearance of New York night-life figures Louis Sobol, Abel Green and Earl Wilson, and with a song by Gloria Jean who's grown up to be quite a personable if somewhat static young lady.

One Marx looks rather lonely; furthermore, for some people, one Marx may be one too many. Suit yourself on this—you have Carmen and Groucho to cheer or boo as the case may be.

Your Reviewer Says: Lots of nothing.

The Ghost Goes Wild (Republic)

DON'T just blame the poor ghost for going wild in this—everything and everybody else do, too. James Ellison and his butler Everett Edward Horton have to walk around tripping over sheets while Anne Gwynne registers horror. They can't scare Ruth Donnelly, though, and that's too bad because she's the one who calls forth all this phenomenal nonsense.

The background is Ellison's farm "Haunted Hill" which really looks like a nice cozy place, not at all the setting for seances and a real ghost who walks through doors in search of chewing gum. Just for another complication, Grant Withers runs through doors with a shotgun looking for Ellison. The finale is a courtroom scene where everyone talks to an empty chair. By this time, most of the audience's chairs will be empty, too.

Your Reviewer Says: Ghostly business.

Born to Kill (RKO)

WHAT a nice little group of people turn up in this! There's Lawrence Tierney who, when he gets upset about anything, just kills someone; Claire Trevor, a hard-bitten lady who likes money; Walter Slezak, the detective who acts so shady as he looks for the murderer of Isabel Jewell (Lawrence, of course). Elisha Cook Jr. tries to keep Lawrence from shooting more people, but when things get touchy he even tries to knife harmless beer-drinking Esther Howard.

This is a dark outlook, you must admit; it's not cheered up any at the end, either— which is one good thing in its favor. The bad stay bad and get their innings; good Phil Terry and honest Kathryn Card just walk out of the picture. They probably thought they'd be better off than in.

Tierney has gone back to his steel-eyed law-breaking with ease and Claire looks the way you'd expect a lady to look when she makes love to a murderer.

Your Reviewer Says: It's a dead duck.

Homesteaders of Paradise Valley (Republic)

NOT much Paradise about this valley—it's all a lot of trouble that has to be cleaned up by Allan Lane as Red Ryder and his juvenile companion, Little Beaver.

It's a Western that has something happening every minute, most of it routine. Some settlers want to homestead out in Paradise Valley, but Milton Kibbee as a sly newspaper publisher wants the land for himself. Red's right in the thick of the fight for a while, but then he deserts to turn journalist, only reappearing just in the nick of time to show up the bad men. Ann Todd tosses her nice little hat in the ring to freshen things up.

Your Reviewer Says: Red Ryder on a routine trail.

Dishonored Lady (Chertok-Stromberg-UA)

HEDY LAMARR looks beautiful throughout, despite the hectic life she has to lead as a neurotic who keeps chasing fun.

Dennis O'Keefe is the young doctor who loves Miss Lamarr when she deserts the glitter life and takes up her paintbrush in an attic. John Loder, who has been made up into a menacing wolf with fake dark eyebrows, plays at being a playboy who just won't let the poor girl alone.

Gentle-faced William Lundigan is supposed to be the heavy villain who brings all this to a climax scene in a courtroom where the dishonored lady is presumably given a new chance at making a go of things. She may be able to manage it—especially since she's the kind of a girl who can look beautiful just after she's been scooped out of a messy smash-up. There's nothing real about this whole business; the question is how any of the participants could have walked through it with straight faces.

Your Reviewer Says: Too bad about Hedy—and the film.

Carnegie Hall (Federal-UA)

READING like a benefit performance is the list of guest artists in this—from Walter Damrosch to Harry James with the N.Y. Philharmonic thrown in. You can expect—and you'll get beautiful music. This is the film that was actually made in Carnegie Hall in New York. It hangs together on an innocuous little story about Marsha Hunt who works at the Hall and whose one desire is to see her son play on its stage. This is a good enough excuse for the artists to start making their bows—Pons, Platiigorsky, Stevens, Rubinstein, Heifetz, Stokowski are some of the performers who turn in their talented bits for the good of "Carnegie Hall."

Vaughn Monroe and Harry James wave their batons with the best of them and a sight-seeing camera roves around periodically through the Hall. But the music would definitely call for three checks, as this is the first time such a galaxy of famous artists has appeared under one banner. If you're in the mood you'll sit back, forget Marsha's problems, and listen.

Your Reviewer Says: Music festival.

ANGEL AND THE BAD MAN—Republic: A Quaker touch gives a novel angle to this Western. Big tough John Wayne falls in with a Quaker family; daughter Gail Russell falls in love with him. This spells reformation, with villain Bruce Cabot in the background just to keep John vacillating between Gail and his gun. (May)

BEAT THE BAND—RKO: Gene Krupa and his band try to beat some sense into this, but even with Frances Langford and Phil Terry chiming in musically it turns out a silly bit about a girl who takes lessons from orchestra leader Terry, masquerading as a classical maestro. Not enough here to cook up anything. (June)

BEGINNING OR THE END, THE—M-G-M: The atom bomb comes up for some pretty good celluloid discussion with Brian Donlevy, Robert Walker and Tom Drake heading a fine cast. It's the history of the bomb from laboratory to Hiroshima done in a factual manner. See it and think. (May)

BOOMERANG—20th Century-Fox: New-type picture based on a Reader's Digest feature in which honest state's attorney Hugo Andrus tries to decide the innocence or guilt of a suspected murderer. Straight realistic film with suspense. (A suddenly)

BRASHER DUBOON, THE—20th Century-Fox: George Montgomery takes over Bogart's role of detective Philip Marlowe to go hunting for a valuable coin. Meant to be a chiller-diller but misses by a gasp or two. (May)

BUCK PRIVATES COME HOME—Universal-International: Like Abbott and Costello? Then you'll probably like this gagged-up bit about their return to the home front and their tangles with copper Nat Pendleton. Silly as a Silly Symphony, with Louie cranking things in a runaway midget auto. (June)

CALCUTTA—Paramount: Enough action out in Calcutta centering around American flyer Alan Ladd, his pal Bill Beauxie and Gail Russell to keep you wondering who did smuggle the jewels. You may be surprised at the way things turn out; then again, maybe you won't. (June)

CALENDAR GIRL—Republic: A Greenwich Village boardinghouse at the turn of the century has Irene Rich as the mother-in-law, Jane Frazee as the girl next door and William Marshall and James Ellison as two of Irene's artistic proteges. The costumes are quaint and there's lots of tunes but not much else. (May)

CHEYENNE—Warner: Nice bad man Dennis Morgan is fascinating to both Jane Wyman and Janis Page in this laisy Western that has to do with the stage-coach robbery days of old Cheyenne. An anonymous bandit called "The Foot" puts this in a different—and good—class by itself. (June)

DUEL IN THE SUN—Vanguard: Jennifer Jones loves two men—wild-oat sower Gregory Peck and his even-keel brother Joseph Cotten way down in Texas. Its big-time overtones, plus Lillian Gish and Lionel Barrymore, still don't make it any more than a dressed-up "melodrammer." (June)

ESCAPE ME NEVER—Warner: Errol Flynn, Eleanor Parker, Ida Lupino and Gig Young cavort around lightly for the first half, then get maddened in a tear-jerking second half. Errol's a carefree composer; Gig, a conservative; rich Eleanor likes Gig, poor Ida likes Errol. It jumps around from the Tyrol to London slums but it's still a big miss. (May)

FABULOUS DORSEYS, THE—Rogers-UA: Tommy and Jimmy give out with the trumpet and sax but aside from the music, the picture hasn't much. It shows the Dorsey's life, featuring Sara Allgood as their mother, and Janet Blair as their singer. William Lundigan carries the love interest. (Apr.)
Arthur Murray Girls tell secret of daintiness while dancing

For safe-and-sure protection they rely on this deodorant above all others

THOSE GRACEFUL, gracious young instructresses at Arthur Murray's must be socially poised...must keep themselves completely dainty through strenuous hours of dancing.

NO WONDER they rely on Etiquet. For Etiquet gives safe-and-sure protection...stops underarm odor...checks perspiration...can be depended upon to guard daintiness through hours of active exercise. And not only is Etiquet so effective—so efficient...Etiquet is delightfully "fluffy"—goes on easily—is soothing to the skin.

ETIQUET stays moist in jar—is harmless to the most delicate fabrics. Now you can share this secret of "dancing daintiness"—always have confidence in your charm by using Etiquet. At all cosmetic counters—in 10¢, 25¢, 39¢ and 59¢ sizes.

FABULOUS SUZANNE—Republic: Cinderella goes to town in this romantic caper, starring bewitching Barbara Britton and daddy-of-crooners Rudy Vallee. The bawdy situations provide a goodly helping of hokum with Richard Denning, Bill Henry, Veda Ann Borg and Otto Kruger. (Apr.)

FARMER'S DAUGHTER, THE, THE—RKO: This is the way democratic politics should work, with Joseph Cotten, Loretta Young and Ethel Barrymore running things. Loretta is the servant Fairy in Cotten's home and what she does to the electorate makes an amusing make-believe evening. (June)

FRAMED—Columbia: Glenn Ford gets picked up in New York, then let down by beautiful schemer Janis Carter and wicked Barry Sullivan. Filled with Ford's special brand of acting that will keep you tuned up for the evening, this has plenty of what it takes. (June)

GUARD OF JANET AMES, THE—Columbia: Rosalind Russell is a neurotic war widow who walks through misty backgrounds trying to find out why her husband gave up his life in the war. Melvyn Douglas plays her guide; Sid Caesar gives the proceedings a shot in the arm with a takeoff on "psychological" films. You may like it. (May)

HELLO, MR. DRAKE—Republic: Roy Rogers, with the help of George "Gabby" Hayes and Dale Evans, goes after the black market boys and makes 'em cry "uncle!" It's a colorful show with what a rodeo, a treasure hunt and a pioneer parade but the spotlight belongs to Rogers and Trigger. (Apr.)

HIGH BARBER—M-G-M: A money-maker with two favorite blondes, Van Johnson and June Allyson, who start out as a little boy and girl dreaming about a fabulous mountain, High Barbecue. It takes lots of homey incidents in an Iowa town, the war and Thomas Mitchell to get the two on the right road to the heights. (June)

I'LL BE YOURS—Universal: Frilly little story about singer Deanna Durbin's trip to the Big City, where she gets all mixed up with—and mixes up—singer Bill Bendix, poliet Adolphe Menjou and Lawyer Tom Drake. Not bad, but hope for better. (Apr.)

IMPERFECT LADY—Paramount: Teresa Wright's past, especially her little mix-up with Anthony Quinn, interferes with husband Ray Milland's career in Parliament. You'll have a good evening's entertainment. Virginia Field and Sir Cedric Hardwicke are good, too. (May)

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN—M-G-M: As perky goings-on in Brooklyn as you'd want with genial Frank Sinatra as the ex-veteran who meets up with music teacher Kathryn Grayson, Jimmy Durante steals the show in his best linguistic manner and Peter Lawford is the nice Englishman who sees America through Brooklyn eyes. (June)

IT HAPPENED ON FIFTH AVENUE—Allied Artists: Unpretentious and highly amusing, this has Victor Moore as a tramp-philosopher who borrows tycoon Charlie Ruggles's Fifth Avenue mansion every winter while Charlie's away. Lots of turn-the-table comedy that makes for homey fun. (May)

IT'S A JOKE, SONG—Eagle-Lion: Kenny Delmar is of course Senator Claghorn of radio fame. He runs for office in the Deep South, booms out his quips in great style. But even with Lisa Merkel and Jane Lockhart, it's on the weak-side sister. (Apr.)

JOHNNY O'CLOCK—Columbia: Dick Powell is the slick young Johnny who gets mixed up in the gambling business; Evelyn Keyes is his girl. The plot is neat; the gangster business isn't overdone; and it's all woven together in a way that makes things hum. (May)

LATE GEORGE APLEY, THE, THE—20th Century-Fox: Ronald Colman moves to Boston Street in Boston and emerges unquestionably as the famous Markham hero. He's lauded by the Press though daughter Peggy Cummins and son Richard Ney do their best to shake him out of it. Boston had better be prepared to laugh at itself because the rest of the country will. (May)

LOCKET, THE—RKO: Your eyes keep getting bigger and bigger watching what Laraine Day does. Robert Mitchum and Brian Aherne know all about her past, which has lots of events in it that no lady should even think of. A psychological thriller done up in style. (June)

LOST HONEYMOON—Eagle-Lion: Franchot Tone gets pulled into a bad situation in a not-so-good film. He marries an English girl overseas while he has amnesia; and just when he's ready to commit bigamy in America comes Ann Richards with his twins. Tom Conway tries to help everybody out, but it's a lost cause. (June)

MACOMBER AFFAIR, THE—Bosco-UA: A happy and personal piece of life in old Baltimore with Jackie Jenkins as the little guy who takes to horses. Peter Lawford as his brother and Spring Byington, Edward Arnold and Charlie Ruggles adding to the good-natured fun. (Apr.)
MY FAVORITE BRUNETTE—Paramount: Words and facial expressions by Bob Hope who falls all over himself running to aid damsel Dorothy Lamour. He meets up with Peter Lorre and a murder charge. Hope really has himself a time and you will too. (May)

NEW ORLEANS—Levey-UA: Louis Armstrong and Billie Holiday perform, but other than that this has nothing to offer. Jazz gets born in New Orleans with the help of Arturo De Cordova, Dorothy Patrick, Louis and Billie. Louis and the music are good, the rest bad. (May)

TORONTO—Warners: Ann Sheridan comes into the life of successful doctor Kent Smith and before it's over you have a gruesomely picturesque of where a back street can lead. Strong point of the film is the dilemma faced by Nora in the climax. (Apr.)

WOOED MAN OUT—J. Arthur Rank: A pretty paste from England with James Mason playing the hunted head of an "organization" in Ireland. It's the story of the eight hours in which he's hunted down by the police, of the people who try to help him and of Kathleen Ryan who waits for his return. Excellent picture with excellent acting. (May)

PURSUED—Warners: Expert treatment of the life of Robert Mitchum who's pursued by a childhood memory in which Judith Anderson figures. Teresa Wright tries to help him; Dean Jagger tries to kill him. It's hate and love on the wild plains of New Mexico set to Max Steiner music. (Apr.)

RAMROD—Enterprise-UA: Here's another wicked lady—Veronica Lake—who makes strong-minded heroes of the West weak in the head. Joel McCrea is the guy who doesn't catch on until it's almost too late that she'd just as soon murder as wink. Veronica's her smouldering self and it's a Lake special. (June)

RED HOUSE, THE—Lesser-UA: A study in introspection to keep you in a high state of tension. Len McCallister is betrayed by a farmer Edward G. Robinson to keep clear of Oriental Woods, enters them instead, finds out about the red house and Rory Calhoun with the help of Judith Anderson and Allene Roberts. (Apr.)

SAN QUENTIN—RKO: This starts out by pinning up the work in federal prisons of the inmates' league for self-discipline but ends up disappointingly as a routine gangster film with grim-faced Lawrence Tierney chasing his killer prey. (Apr.)

SEA OF GRASS, THE—M-G-M: Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn get emotional about life on the cattle range in the eighteen-hundreds. Their marriage runs into complications, one of whom is lawyer Melvyn Douglas; the years bring children Robert Walker and Phyllis Thaxter as well as plenty to keep you interested. (May)

SHOCKING MISS PILGRIM, THE—20th-Century-Fox: This had a big opportunity in a brand-new plot—a female "typewriter" who walks into a staid Boston office in 1874. It could have been a diverting comedy, but it peter's out instead into a love duet between Betty and her crooning boss Jack Haynes. Fair enough, but could have been better. (June)

SINBAD THE SAILOR—RKO: Fabulous Sinbad played by Douglas Fairbanks Jr. sails in search of treasure. Done in rich Technicolor, with a fantastic atmosphere, plenty of action, wicked Anthony Quinn and handsome Maureen O'Hara. (Apr.)

SMASH-UP: THE STORY OF A WOMAN—Universal-International: Susan Hayward turns in a fine picture of an alcoholic woman married to Lee Bowman and resentful of his secretary Martha Hunt. When time hangs heavy on her jeweled fingers she takes to the bottle. It's a shocker. (May)

SONG OF SCHEHERAZADE, THE—Universal-International: Dreamed-up stuff with Joan Pass Aumont as composer Rimsky-Korsakov bearing his way through colorful happenings in a Moroccan port. Yvonne De Carlo dances; there's lots of music, a fight with bull whips and nonsense involving Brian Donlevy. (May)

TAZAN AND THE HUNTRESS—RKO: Some hunters (one's a Patricia Morison) invade Johnny Weissmuller's jungle in search of zoo specimens, but they're defeated before they ever start. Brenda Joyce, Johnny Sheffield, Cheta and some refreshing jungle scenes make this a foregone winner in the Saturday-afternoon line-up. (June)

TIME OUT OF MIND—Universal-International: The novel was a best-seller, but the film fell flat on its high-mined nose. Phyllis Calvert is good as the housekeeper's daughter who tries to make a musician of Robert Hutton, with Ella Raines in there plugging, too. Eddie Albert is featured. (June)

TWO MRS. CARROLLS, THE—Warners: Mr. Carroll is Humphrey Bogart and Mrs. Carroll is Barbara Stanwyck. They seem an ideal married couple until you and Barbara begin to find out what happened to the first Mrs. Carroll. There's roaring wind, beating rain and suspense; everything's dandy except that tough Bogie cracks up unbelievably under the strain. (June)

WELCOME STRANGER—Paramount: Everyone takes it easy—Bing sings genially, Barry Fitzgerald's Capo and Joan Caulfield acts the pretty foil. The light lullabies pleasantly along the route of a city doctor's sojourn in a Maine village. (June)

IT'S a real caution the way things happen in Hollywood. For instance, casting director Jack Murton had "lifted" two Hollywood High School girls to school.

"You should see him in our class play," the girls were chanting.

"See whom?" Jack asked.

"Richard Long. He's wonderful," they enthused. So Jack suggested the girls have Richard telephone him that day.

It took a lot of doing to get Richard to the phone but after he'd gone to the studio and read the part of Drew Claudette Colbert's older son in the film "Tomorrow Is Forever," he was hit and no fooling around. His next performance in "The Stranger" convinced executives Richard was a natural, and International Pictures placed him under contract.

Dick (the youngest of six children) was born in Chicago December 17, 1927, and went from Waller High School to the Township High at Evanston. Remembering their home in Hollywood when they were first married, his father (a commercial artist) and mother returned four years ago and Richard enrolled at Hollywood High. He won an "H" for tennis and created another "H" for havoc among the girls who cased the six-foot-one, brown-haired lad with the oversized gray eyes and two stand-in dimples that almost make big time when he smiles. He's had a few crushes in his time but realizes a teen-age romance isn't to be thought of seriously.

Being the only actor in the family, Dick comes in for quite a bit of well-intentioned criticism which he accepts gratefully. Of course, twelve-year-old Phillip's pronouncement that brother Dick plain stinks, he accepts as disguised praise.

He doesn't think his role in "The Dark Mirror" or his part in "The Egg and I" were very much but his studio just smiles and says nothing. They have plans for Richard, who can not only act but beat a piano into a frenzy—as if he weren't fascinating enough to the femmes.

Outside Romanoff's where the fans gather to glimpse the stars, they made one mad rush for Richard.

"Hey, Dick," both boys and girls called in unison, "how about signing our autograph?" And when fans greet an actor with a "Hey, Dick," brother, he's in.

Valerie Hobson in "Great Expectations," British film

By Mary Jane Fulton

CALLING LONDON!

VALERIE HOBSON is a popular English actress. When you see her play the femme lead in "Great Expectations," J. Arthur Rank's interesting movie version of the Dickens classic, she will win your admiration, too . . . PHOTOPLAY, alert to any and all film personalities in the news, decided to talk with Valerie via trans-Atlantic telephone. So, in a trice, we were chatting with her in London!

WHAT IS REAL BEAUTY?

How had she managed to keep well-groomed and attractive in these times of shortages and hardships? Modestly she replied, not alone for herself, but for her countrywomen. Valerie told us that even a movie star, expected to maintain her glamour, cannot have special privileges. With soap products rationed, she, like all English women, must furnish her own soap when having her hair shampooed at the hairdresser's. It's the same with nail polish and nail polish remover . . . Cosmetics, although not rationed, are scarce. At the studios, make-up is kept under lock and key . . . We complain of high prices and taxes—but how lucky we are. There's never been a time when we couldn't buy cosmetics. During temporary shortages, they could change from favorite brands to other good ones. But in England, it's still not a question of what women like best; it's what they can get. On very little, Valerie states, they manage to present an almost unbelievably attractive appearance. . . . "Have you noticed that the privations English women have endured during recent years has aged them prematurely?" we asked. Almost reverently, she replied: "In many cases, yes. To me, however, a woman is truly lovely only when she possesses beauty of spirit. I'm proud to say that, no matter what their ages, my countrywomen's wonderful spirit is reflected in their faces—giving to their expressions a beauty which softens any aging effects the war's experiences and its aftermath have etched upon their faces." This answer from lovely Valerie should give all of us American girls much food for thought in the future.

Larry and Betty: Enjoying his first recess from the movies since he began "The Jolson Story," Larry Parks is like a kid out of school for a summer vacation. He and wife Betty are busy fixing their small house up Nichol's Canyon way.

The house began when a flood swept one room of a nearby house up on a hillside and left it there. When no one reported a missing room, the people who owned the property simply built a little home around the room and sold it to Larry. The white dog house in the rear belongs to the setter given Betty by the cast of "Call Me Mister" when she left the New York show for Hollywood. Betty, of course, promptly named the dog "Mister" and with his own brush Larry has carefully painted over the dog house door "Mr. Mister."

The Taylors: The separation between the parents of sixteen-year-old Elizabeth Taylor was caused by disagreement over how a teen-age daughter should be brought up. The question of dates with boys, of how soon Elizabeth should wear lipstick, what time she should get in from dates, and a dozen other similar problems that confront parents of young girls.

Finally, realizing the welfare and feeling of security in a united home were more important to Elizabeth than any divided opinions concerning her deportment, the Taylors reunited and took a house at Malibu.
More parents who face the same problems can take a lesson from the Taylors and put a child's first needs first.

Beverly Hills Beachhead: This month the New York division of Photoplay hit our Hollywood shores. Spearheaded by Meyer Dworkin, the man who as treasurer makes Macfadden Publications jingle, and staunchly supported by New York editor Helen Gilmore and Western editor Joyce Moss, the party launched into a gay round at Mocambo, hosted by Perry Lieber, head of RKO publicity (they call him "the genial genius") with Jane Greer, RKO’s brunette hope... Jerry Asher, Photoplay writer, threw a star-at-home party just to prove Hollywood enjoys sitting around on the floor as well as you do. There were Anne and John Hodika, the Zach Scotts, the Mark Stevenses, John Dall and Helena Carter, Cesar Romero in the bowing board he wears as Cortez in “Captain from Castle” and Glenn Ford in sideburns as “The Man from Colorado.” On him they were even becoming.

Meyer’s trip was a success when he spent two hours and a half with his favorite actor, Thomas Mitchell. Speaking of Mitchell, Jim (The Smile) Mitchell, True Story advertising director, and his charming wife Florence, hit town the following week. In their honor Maria Montez and Jean Pierre Aumont gave a delightful dinner in their home, sparked by Peggy Cummins, the Seymour Nebenzals, Jean Sablon (the French Sinatra) and the lovely Lucita, Maria’s young sister with her groom of five days, Jean Vois, young French journalist. Afterwards the party moved to Ciro’s where Sablon wrapped up all hearers in his Paree version of “The Girl I Will Marree.” Wait till you hear it!

Then there was the hospitable shindig at Ruth Waterbury’s where Joe and Catherine Dooher added a note of brightness to the True Story contingent. Joan Crawford was there with her electric greeting, the Alan Laddis, Dan Duryea, the John Lunds, the Macdonald Careyes, Joan Caulfield looking mighty lovely, and Bill Eythe, about to show off east for his marriage to Buff Cobb. Helen Gilmore told Sue and Alan the four-leaf clovers she found at their ranch had already gone to work. “Ladd’s luck” she’s going to call everything that happens from here in.

Come again, kids!

1. Rounded Ends
Insertion is easy with Fibs tampons... because Fibs have gently rounded ends. You'll see, when you switch to Fibs and find at last—a tampon that's easy to use!

2. "Quilted" Comfort
You scarcely know you're wearing Fibs, because "quilting" makes this tampon really comfortable. You see, quilting keeps Fibs from fluffing up to an uncomfortable size... which could cause pressure, irritation or difficult removal. Remember the tampon that's quilted for your comfort: Fibs.

3. "Quilted" Safety
Quilting adds to your peace of mind—because it helps prevent cotton particles from clinging to delicate internal tissues—a Fibs safeguard women always appreciate. Only Fibs are quilted for your safety. So next month, switch to Fibs for internal sanitary protection.

They were all over the place, in the kitchen, in the icebox, like neighborhood kids who come visiting.

"What do you do between pictures?" we asked Guy. "Oh, go to the beach," he said. "Gail doesn't like the ocean so I hurry back and we sit in the sun. I guess I just look after my little girl," he smiled with masculine pride.

Gail decided that what Cal needed was a good oil painting of himself and she was the one to do it, so without quite knowing how, we found ourselves posing for pencil sketches which Gail will later transfer to canvas.

On Guy's left hand he wore a wedding ring. "When are you two kids going to get married?" we said. Guy looked down at his ring. "When she'll have me," he said. "I'm ready when she is."

So don't be surprised at anything that happens—and soon.

The Inside on the Clarks: "You're going to dinner with Dane and me," Margo Clark said, "and no excuses." But Cal had already made plans to attend the Jean Sablon opening at Ciro's and had to refuse. But we did learn the present marital status between Margo and Clark.

Margo had returned from her estrangement from Dane in New York to divorce the actor. But once here, the couple decided to try again, as Margo freely admits she loves Dane and was in hopeless despair without him. Dane loves and needs Margo, too, so the pair decided to reconcile.

But somehow things weren't the same, as is so often the case. Having relinquished a promising career as a pianist, Margo now felt the need of individual expression, of being the accomplished person she was when Dane knew and fell in love with her. So, after long talks, she has decided to return to New York and take some art and designing courses. When Dane joins her in early summer they will again discuss their still undecided future, and perhaps go to Europe together. Both are trying in an adult way to adjust themselves to a reappraisal of marriage. Cal sincerely hopes it works out.

Romance First Hand: Handsome Michael North, who will disturb feminine hearts when "The Unsuspected" is released, and the girl he adores, Audrey Totter, dropped in for a cocktail. Mike certainly doesn't conceal his admiration for Audrey. He laughed loudest at her tales of her radio experiences, even above the shouts of Glenn Ford, Kurt Kreuger and Hardy Hatfield.

Is that the kind of treatment a pretty girl should get when she's off on her vacation and ready for romance?

Not if she's a bright girl, it isn't!

But Ginny isn't very bright about some things: her breath, for example.

She has a little touch of halitosis (bad breath) from time to time, and the boys have already spotted it. She's elected herself to the "Suicide Club": social suicide, that is. She'll miss many a good time, sit out many a dance, watch the moon rise alone: and wonder why.

You, yourself, may not realize when you have halitosis (unpleasant breath)*. So the smart thing to do is to be extra careful about offending this way. And by being "extra careful" we mean using Listerine Antiseptic night and morning, and especially before any date where you want to be at your best.

Almost instantly Listerine Antiseptic makes your breath fresher, sweeter, less likely to offend. Start the day and go to your date with a wonderful feeling of greater assurance and freshness. Make Listerine Antiseptic a "must" every day. It helps you to be at your best always.

Lambert Pharmacal Company, St. Louis, Missouri

*While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.
INSIDE STUFF

European invasion: Feminine hearts will pit-a-pat at Louis Jourdan, Gallic star in "The Parapine Case" (first pic here)

(Continued from page 24) had left, and Audrey, Mike and Cal had gone to dinner, he told us that he'd been knocked cold from the moment Audrey walked on the set. "I'm really crazy about her but she won't take me seriously," he said. We could have told Mike that perhaps Audrey is more interested in a career at the moment than romance. Anyway our conscience hurt us a bit. Only that morning we'd given Audrey's phone number to Cesar Romero who had met her once. Oh, well, we like both lads and Audrey too. So now we'll see.

Cocktails and Art: It was a small party for cocktails at Lady Mendil's; Van and Evie Johnson, Cal and Nelson Seabra of Rio, Sir Charles and their house guest Richard Ney. Later we were taken over the house by Lady Mendil and came away convinced this was the loveliest and most ingeniously decorated of homes.

"My autographed book for you," Lady Mendil said and presented Cal with "Elsie De Wolfe's (her maiden name) Recipes for Successful Dining," which Lady Mendil had had printed herself to be sold for the needy of France. When we suggested many of our readers would love having the book, the author, who has now left for France, suggested they write to Gloria Bristol's salon on Rodeo Drive, Beverly Hills, California, for a copy which costs three dollars, plus postage.

The next week Cal met Tony Duquette at a swank exhibition of his work. He's the young artist Lady Mendil is sponsoring and who created so many of the beautiful things in her home.

Tyronne: "Come over to my dressing room," Tyrone Power had said. "I'll meet you there."

In a suite, large as many an apartment and tastefully furnished, we waited for the actor to arrive from the "Captain from Castile" set. Soon we heard his voice as he entered the outer office and went to meet him. In a few minutes we were off to the studio cafe for lunch.

Lloyd Nolan came over to ask Tyrone if he minded if his luncheon guests came over for his autograph. Without a moment's hesitation, Ty went to their table, was graciousness and kindness itself.

Back in his dressing room, Ty showed us pictures of his South American trip and smiled when we raved over his steam cabinet, the beautiful radio-phonograph, maple furniture, etc.

"A body could very well live here," we remarked. "A body may very well have to if this body doesn't get somewhere to live soon," he laughed.

Ginny and Hyatt: Picking up Bob and Cleatus Hutton we drove up the mountain side to the beautiful new modern home of Ginny Simms and Hyatt Dehn. The cocktail party was in full swing when we got there and after greeting the hostess, we were taken upstairs by the host to see the mirrored window that permitted the couple to view their little son asleep in his crib in the next room. Howard Hughes sat down for a chat and Bob and Mary Cummings proudly showed us pictures of their son. Frances Langford and (Continued on page 29)

After the party, the Huttons and Cal dined at the Chantecaille where practically every booth was crowded with stars listening to the wonderful music. A combination Romanoff's and Mocambo, Bob called it. Still later, we all trekked over to Slapsey Maxie's to hear Joe Lewis sing but Cal was so diverted by dancer Johnny Coyle's convulsive laughter over everything Lewis did, we found him gin to the singer. Johnny had his cute wife Babs out for their first evening's fun since their baby's birth. He tells us they'll take the baby back to Montreal to be christened by the same minister who christened John.

Here and There: Frank Sinatra ignored magazine writers at a press conference, held a little late after all those bombastic insults Frank has been hurling in the direction of the press. Or maybe Frankie now needs the press on his side since his arrest for socking columnists. Let's believe Mona Freeman, that precocious teen-ager in "Dear Ruth," is the wife of Pat Nearnley and will become a mother in the fall. John Lund and his cute wife Marie trekked to La Quinta in Palm Springs for a rest and the first person John ran into was Olivia de Havilland who played his mother in “To Each His Own.” The Lansds, Olivia and husband Marcus Goodrich were a constant tennis foursome... Alan Ladd is making his first Technicolor film, "Whispering Smith," after ten years of acting and doesn't even need make-up due to the deep tan acquired on his Valley ranch... Creating a stir at “The Egg and I” were Turhan Bey and Ava Gardner looking sooo interested in each other.

Ohio to Castle: It's a long jump from a small farm in Ohio to Tyrone Power's leading lady in "Captain from Castile," but Jean Peters made it. And with the picture over, months of location in Mexico behind her, and multi-millionaire Howard Hughes for a beau, Jean still looks the farm-maid type.

The publicity boys at Twentieth came running into Jim Reid's office where we were to meet Jean, with glamour poses of Miss Peters to offset, we suppose, her appearance off-screen which borders on the dowdy. Like a deliberate challenge to Hollywood, Miss Peters wears no make-up, not even a vestige of lipstick or powder. Her brown hair, uncombed and uncurled, clung to one side of her head, but her small brown eyes reveal the intelligence within. Plainly, the studio lads were embarrassed and seemed ill at ease, but Cal quite frankly enjoyed the experience and sensed instantly the fact that here was a gal gone overboard in her rebellion against any Hollywood demands.

After her freshman years at the University of Michigan, Jean went back to her native Ohio. She won the campus popularity contest at Ohio State, which won her a movie test and a contract at Twentieth. "Captain from Castile" was her first movie assignment.

Outside Canton, Ohio, where Jean was born, she led a wonderful life as a child with orchards to play in, church festivals to attend, and a seven-acre farm to roam over. She still knits and tugs but can't dance—at least not the ballroom kind.

She'd better be as good on the screen as one hears if she is to maintain that rugged individualism. For heaven's sake, Cal keeps wondering, what must Tyrone and Howard Hughes think of it all, or is he merely trying to emulate Howard's appearance? As for us, we like it and Jean. Pears like she really has something.

Viva Mexico: A brand new friendship has developed between Evelyn Keyes and Lauren Bacall through the interests of their husbands, both in Mexico making "Treasure of the Sierra Madre."

Evelyn and Lauren planned to fly together to Mexico to visit Humphrey Bogart and John Huston. The girls shopped for all kinds of vacation clothes and when Evelyn had to return sooner than the others for "The Mating of Millie McGonigle," she brought back dozens of Mexican sandals.

The two couples had a wonderful time on location and expect to take up where they left off when they all get back to Hollywood.

It's three on a mountain-top for Jeanne Crain now that little Paul has come to live with her and big Paul.

"A boy. Seven pounds and fifteen ounces."

"Did they name him yet?"

"Oh, yes. Paul Frederick Brinkman Jr."

"How's the mother?"

"Oh, she's fine. And the baby—he's simply perfect."

"Thanks," said the reporter, and hung up, so excited about getting his scoop that he never realized that he had talked to Jeanne Crain herself.

As for Jeanne, she hung up, and didn't even know she had held the conversation—or with whom. She just went back to sleep again. But that was how it happened that the news of her baby's birth made the papers less than an hour after the proud and adoring father was allowed upstairs into the room.

They laugh about that now, Jeanne and Paul, as they camp with Paul (Continued on page 89)
Are you one of those who thought Hollywood was ungrateful in fighting the Fans’ Convention? If so, you should read this Is Hollywood inhospitable to the fans who support it? Is Hollywood being rude to the International Fan Club League which wants to hold a convention in honor of the stars?

On the other hand:

Is there a good reason why the fans shouldn’t meet in Hollywood and see their favorites? Would it be dangerous to turn a national convention of fans loose in Hollywood? Could the studios sponsor or cooperate with such a convention?

Hollywood has been unhappily aware of the fact that it was sitting on top of a first-class volcano. It all began last November with Mrs. Ellen E. Roufs, President of the International Fan Club League. Mrs. Roufs operates a mimeographing service and was launched in this business by the fan club she formed for James Stewart six years ago. Subsequently, she formed other clubs to which she extended her mimeographing service. Then, last November, Mrs. Roufs had an idea. Then and there she put it into effect. She sent bulletins to the presidents of the five hundred member clubs of the International League suggesting a Hollywood convention during the month of June. Mrs. Roufs hoped, she stated, to hold a dance at which the stars would be present, to take fans through the studios, to have the stars present at a tea and open forum. And she planned, she announced, to use the Masonic Temple for a convention hall and to hold a dinner party at Ciro's.

She told the 500 club presidents of the League that they would have to make their own hotel reservations in advance and that the fee for attendance at the convention would be twenty dollars per person.

Unaware of any of this, Hollywood went its usually hectic, but comparatively calm, way. Until last February. In February Mrs. Roufs sent her publicity man, Ned Crawford, well-known in Hollywood, to the two motion picture studio associations, the Association of Motion Picture Producers and the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, to ask for studio cooperation. Envisioning a full-dress affair with enormous national publicity, Mr. Crawford suggested that the producers contribute $4,000 to assure the convention's success.

It was at this point that dismay, frustration and bitterness set in and a national hullabaloo began to pop. For the producers said no. They said it very firmly. They explained such a contribution would make them legally and morally responsible for the convention. They pointed out Los Angeles was in the throes of a pretty frightening crime wave . . . that Mrs. Roufs had made no arrangements for chaperoning, supervising or protecting the hundreds of visitors she had invited to California. The producers (Continued on page 119)
George Sanders, the man who said he hated women, is learning too late what one woman—his wife—really meant to him

By Harriet Eaton

George Sanders, the most mysterious and close-mouthed actor in Hollywood, who convinced many people he meant all the cynical things he has said about women, has broken his ten-year silence because of the break-up of his marriage. After a secret courtship followed by seven years of an equally secret marriage, his wife suddenly left him last December.

"I didn't give, you see," George told a friend. "I only took."

This does not sound remotely like the George Sanders about whom Hollywood has puzzled ever since his arrival from England ten years ago. Depending upon the point of view, he has been called a difficult personality and a provocative personality... a bitterly scathing talker and a brilliant talker. And always he has hidden his innermost feelings; frequently with a curt, "That's none of your business."

No more, however. Today he says: "Since the break-up of my marriage, friends have tried to console me by saying there are as good fish in the sea as ever came out of it..."

"I wonder about that... I really wonder..."

His friends are amazed at the change in him. Not many are his friends, actually, for during his years in Hollywood he has gone out of his way not to make friends. He has been very frank about this too. "I am always rude to people, I'm afraid," he told a writer whom he had just met. "I don't put on the prop smile and oblige. I just look frightfully busy. I am not a sweet person. I am a disagreeable person."

However, George's few friends insist it was not because of any wish to be disagreeable that he kept his wife in the background—and so finally lost her. He did this, they say, rather out of his love for her. He wished her to stay the way she was—simple, unaffected, truly a woman. When he left the studio for home he wanted her to be waiting for him, bringing him everything a man could ask for: Serenity, peace, (Continued on page 70)
A dream finally realized, Rita boards SS Veendam for Europe

Mr. and Mrs. Welles at LaRue's before the dam broke

ARE you going to marry David Niven after you divorce Orson Welles?”
I put the question straight to Rita Hayworth. I am never one to quibble with my friends even when the question is as delicate as this rude poser.

“How can you ask such a ridiculous question?” Rita asked me. “Of course I am not. I am young. I like to go out. I like to have dinner with my friends, but I am not thinking of marrying anyone right now.

“David was lonely,” she went on. “He had lost his beautiful young wife. He has two motherless boys and, as a mother, I can appreciate his problem. I like David and admire him tremendously. I think right now we are good for each other. But because you leave your husband is no reason you have to marry immediately.”

“Then, you won’t marry again,” I persisted.
Photoplay’s headline reporter breaks the silence that could be heard from Hollywood to New York when Rita Hayworth left Orson Welles Rita Hayworth, flying high in "Down to Earth"
“Certainly, I’ll marry again. I love a home and I would hate to think that I would have to spend all my days alone in the future. But I am in no hurry to marry. I have had two husbands and I am not yet thirty. The next time must be the right one.”

I talked with Rita in New York, the day before she sailed for Europe where, as a guest of the Army, she was to visit and entertain soldiers. She had not yet recovered from the heartache she knew over the dissolution of her marriage. But she had, nevertheless, taken hold of herself.

I found our interview strangely reminiscent of one I did with Rita for Photoplay the first time she left Orson Welles. Then I asked her if she expected to marry Tony Martin. And she was as vehement in her denials as she is now about David Niven. However, her dates with Tony were in the open, at night clubs where they danced as beautifully as any pair I ever saw.

Solo in the sun for Gregory Peck, star of "The Macomber Affair"
Greg always has insisted that Uncle Charlie was the only one in his family who ever knew where he was going.

BY DEE LOWRANCE

LIKE the late Tammany politician, Big Tim Sullivan, Gregory Peck works on the theory that he doesn’t care what is printed about him, as long as his name is spelled right.

He’s adopted this philosophy out of necessity, not out of choice.

“Lesson number one I’ve learned in my three and a half years in Hollywood,” he explained, “is to say ‘It doesn’t matter’ to whatever is printed about me. I’ve learned to mean it, too.

“Every profession has its hazards. Doctors lose patients, lawyers get adverse court decisions. An actor must plan on seeing the unexpected, even the untrue, about his personal and professional life appear in print.”

Because he is honest, and natural, Gregory Peck has had more trouble than a lot of Hollywood poseurs. Around the studios they tell of one of his early interviewers, a lady with fixed ideas of her own. She was looking for a combination of John Barrymore, Sir Henry Irving and Basil Rathbone. She opened the interview with: “Oh, that beautiful voice of yours, Mr. Peck— (Continued on page 118)
Gene Tierney's initials give her away. They're clues to her divorce, why she left Hollywood, what's ahead

BY ELSA MAXWELL

GENE TIERNEY looks as sophisticated as pink champagne and as exotic as Scheherazade. But she's as simple as the New England countryside in which she grew up and as much fun as Brooklyn where she was born.

All of which explains why Gene left Hollywood exactly seven days after the Los Angeles Superior Court granted her divorce from Oleg Cassini.

"You feel so lonely when you're divorced," she said. "You wonder if you'll ever be able to care that much again—or have that much to give anybody else."

Gene, of course, could have remained in Hollywood. Any one of a dozen attractive men I might name would have been delighted to be in constant attendance. She could have gone dancing at all the smartest places. She would have been invited to swim in the biggest pools. She would have been a desired (Continued on page 112)

Next, past colorful Olvera Street, as Mexican as Mexico City, with ever-intriguing Chinatown nearby. Then on to Sunset Boulevard.

Guy was only seven, but in some desperate way he knew he had been put to the test—and failed.

BY DOROTHY DEERE

HE STOOD with scared eyes fastened to the criminal evidence spread on the floor. He was seven years old and dressed in khaki shorts that hung loosely on his bony little hips.

The words of the nurse made hissing sounds in the shower-room. "Someone hasn't been eating their bread—" she was saying sternly, pointing to the unrolled napkin, spilling its stiffening bread-crusts to public gaze...

"Someone doesn't care if he gets strong and healthy or not—" the nurse was accusing. "And—what's much worse—someone has been being sneaky about it!"

Silence rode the ranks of the dozen small boys lined up against the wall. Only the drip-drip of a faucet dared intrude on the shameful sound of that word "sneaky." It was a new word to the vocabulary of young Bob Moseley (later to become famous as Guy Madison) and he instantly decided he wanted no further connection with it...

Of course, everyone at the health resort knew it was a sin not to eat the four helpings of everything served to them each day. It was just that young Bob preferred his own method for a balanced diet. By rolling up his day's ration of bread or toast and stuffing it into his shorts, to be thrown away after mealtime, (Cont'd on page 93)

I believe in personal check-ups. Life seems to be a series of check-ups, whether it’s the dentist, the doctor or the last time the oil was changed in the family car.

What more important than a little checking up— and down—with yourself? Find out what is wanting... and what you yourself want.

What about this girl Caulfield? Am I reasonably happy? What do I expect from my film future, and what can I do about getting it?

I’m a lucky girl. A very lucky girl. But what assurance have I that there will be blue skies from now on? Would the odds be better if I had struggled and starved?

I came to Hollywood three years ago from the cast of a hit Broadway show, “Kiss and Tell.” In three years I’ve starred in two pictures with Bing Crosby, one with Bob Hope, danced in a film with Fred Astaire, and worked with prize people like Claude Rains and Bill Holden, with whom I co-star in the Paramount production, “Dear Ruth.” Then add to this the privilege of being directed by that great artist, director Mike Curtiz.

And for all of it I can take little or no credit. I’ve had help, great help, from every star I’ve worked with. At all times I’ve had the full backing of my studio, and particularly that of the Paramount publicity personnel who have publicized Caulfield into a “name” in an (Continued on page 78)

The "affair" was going strong until her husband came along—now it's just a memo for a columnist's notebook UNDERSTAND," said Sidney Skolsky, the columnist, to Sidney Skolsky, the producer, "that you know Evelyn Keyes very well. That you had a romance with her.

"How you talk!" said the producer. "And what difference does it make if I did?"

"Ah, you admit it," said the columnist. "I just want to ask you a few questions because I am doing an article on her."

That's the difference between a columnist and a producer. A columnist leans back and asks questions. A producer leans forward and answers them.

"And what do you want to know?" asked the producer, leaning forward.

"I want to know how the romance started," said the columnist, leaning back and rather powerfully pleased. "But in telling me about the romance, I want you to reveal everything about Evelyn Keyes."

There wasn't anything to do but tell him. The producer started. "Our acquaintance really began just before 'The Jolson Story' went into production. I was the producer of that picture, you know. Well, I wanted to make certain that Evelyn was the type to play Mrs. Al Jolson and so I began to instruct her and coach her in the part."

"But don't you think that Al Jolson would have been better qualified for that task?" asked the columnist.

"Gee, a producer has to do something," said the producer, "and besides it appeared like such nice work."

The producer started again. "Evelyn Keyes hails from Port Arthur, Texas, and the date is November 20, 1919. She moved to Atlanta, Georgia, when she was a youngster and she considers this her home town. She is five feet four inches tall, weighs 112 pounds, has brown eyes and blonde hair."

WHAT happens when two male stars come to New York City for a few weeks of business and fun? What happens when these two stars are Peter Lawford and Frank Sinatra? What happens if these two are together?

What happens?—Everything! Pull up a ringside chair and have a look!

Peter and Frankie were in Manhattan to do some scenes for their new co-starring M-G-M picture, "It Happened in Brooklyn"... but that's beside the point. Most of the scenes in their trip happened in real life. And everything turned into an adventure. Take something as simple as deciding to go out to buy shoes. "We'll go to my favorite shoe shop," Frank told Peter.

"Oke," said Peter. They set out from the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, whistling in harmony.

It was a rainy afternoon, and hardly a figure moved on the wet streets as they rode in a taxi to the shoe store at 47th Street and Madison Avenue. Only one rain-soaked boy noticed them as they got out of the taxi and went into the shop. They sat (Continued on page 83)

ESTHER WILLIAMS is in the small kitchen of her small house. She is wearing a two-piece swim suit. Her feet are bare. And the ends of her hair are wet. She stirs something in a big black pot on the gas range, takes a sip, nods, her head and says, "I had a ham bone and I made pea soup—try it."

This is Esther Williams, the All-American Girl—at home. Usually you see Esther all dressed up—or all undressed up, on a lavish studio set, or at a glittering party. But after spending a day with Esther in her own home, you understand for the first time why she is a prime favorite with movie audiences all over the world. The wholesomeness that you see on the screen is not acting. It's as real as a sunny day in California. Or—a better metaphor—it's as real as Esther Williams.

The house shared by Esther and her husband, Ben Gage, is the clue to her personality. Esther bought the house two years ago when she was working in "Easy to Wed." And when Don Loper, Hollywood's famous designer of everything from hats to houses, heard about it he said to Esther, "I hear you've got a new house." "Yes," replied Esther, "and I'm so happy." On the there was a little girl who set her heart on becoming a great actress. Her mother disapproved, but what mother can withstand a pretty daughter who goes around for weeks repeating: "It's drama school, or nothing!"

So, Lizabeth Scott came to New York to study at the Alviene School of Drama and, believe it or not, turned down all the adoring young men who wanted to take her to dinner at 21, late suppers at the Persian Room, or dancing on a starlit roof.

She had work to do. She had a dream that had to be forged into reality.

And—like the tale of Cinderella—this ends on a happy note. Judging by the acclaim of Mr. and Mrs. Moviegoer, Lizabeth Scott's dream has become a reality.
2. When she was in high school in Scranton, Pennsylvania, Lizbeth, in love with a medical student, boned up on medicine. She believed in “talking to your love about his love.”

4. Tired of waiting for a chance at “Talu’s” part, she quit to model hats—which she hates. Then a frantic stage director recalled her—and she returned to score in Tallulah’s role.

3. Her first job after drama school was in a road show of “Hellzapoppin.” “Charming nonsense,” says Liz. Next she understudied Tallulah Bankhead in Broadway’s “Skin of Our Teeth.”

5. Her fashion modeling and a photo in Harper's Bazaar brought a phone call from the coast. Lizabeth wound up at Warners' with a contract, paycheck—but no work. She read scripts and scripts, nary a part

6. When Hal Wallis left Warners' to form his own company, he remembered Lizabeth Scott—her voice, her looks. She was the first personality he signed

7. The movie public first saw Lizabeth with Bob Cummings in "You Came Along." As an opening gun it was terrific. Movie-goers said "Great Scott!"

8. Off the screen she indulges in her tomboy streak—goes in for such sports as ocean fishing. Her love of the outdoors is reflected in her personality
9. Another notch in the gun for Lizabeth when she was starred with Humphrey Bogart in "Dead Reckoning." Bogie met a fair match in Siren Liz DONNA MULLENGER, born in Iowa, the principal crops of which are corn and beautiful women, was thrice selected a queen.

"Which is quite understandable."

This is the unbiased view of no less an authority than debonair Tony Owen. Mr. Owen is in the enviable position of knowing. He is her husband.

Tony looks the way a guy named Tony ought to look. His hair and eyes are black, his hide the tan of saddle leather; he's athletic, horsey and he looks right in tobacco tweed.

Darksome Tony is a setting for the topaz sparkle of Donna who doesn't care awfully for the name Reed or know how in Metro she got it. She thinks probably it was given her under ether by Bill Grady, the casting director.

Donna's hair and eyes are autumn brown. When laughing her eyes fizz with golden bubbles like fresh churned cider; her nose tilts and her lips part wide for a dazzle you seldom get from beauties not of African ancestry. (Miss Mullenger's ancestors were Irish and Queens no doubt.) It's not royalty but nature you think of when gazing on Donna. She has the shimmer of rippling streams full of rainbow trout. You can hear the meadow larks and sniff the goldenrod, and goldarned near write poetry good as Walt Whitman's.

Mr. Owen was stricken on first sight of her.

"What a radiantly beautiful girl—and a lady," he said to himself breathing hard. A second later he had a psychic flash. "I am going to marry her."

Mr. Owen was shocked severely by the flash. "It can't be," he said. "It can't happen. Not to old Pop Owen."

He had no idea who the vision was.

And that, gals, should be our theme song for the summer—plus the motto, “Take it easy!” To suit actions to words, we should cut down on everything—clothes, food, and work. If we do this, we're bound to be summer-glamour-gals!
Let me introduce my model beach beauty right now—Virginia Mayo, one of the most gorgeous blondes the sun shines on. What’s her summer recipe?
“Keep it simple,” said she. “By which I mean your clothes, your hair-do, your meals and your activities. Be stripped for hot weather in every way, including mentally. But then,” she added, “I have a special theory about the summer. I think it's the time when every girl can be more relaxed, comfortable, happy and attractive than any other time of the year. Why, I’ve worked out a summer system myself, based on my theory!”

It’s those precious little details, subtle or otherwise, those extra stitches—which make the difference between the accepted fashion, the “usual thing,” and an effect that combines the last word in chic and becoming-ness. I’ve always thought this applies not only to a dress or costume as a whole—but in the matter of accessories. Like bothering to see that a bag, shoes or gloves really match each other, or the dress they’re being worn with, instead of settling for something that “goes with it.”

I saw proof of this in the absolutely dreamy ensemble that Joan Fontaine wowed forty-nine other gals with at the lovely luncheon and baby shower that Mrs. Lee Bowman gave for Constance Moore. There wasn’t one meow for Joan’s suit that looked like a knitted job, but actually was made of strips of silk woven together to look like striped wool. It was of bright canary (Continued on page 107)

There is no doubt that Elsie, loving George devotedly, did wait upon him and do everything in her power to please him and to meet his every mood...

Until that day just before Christmas when George came home to discover that Elsie would be waiting for him no longer. She was tired, apparently, of waiting for him and she was leaving. She made her announcement as she packed. And completely taken by surprise, he argued with her for hours... while she methodically continued her packing, called a taxi and drove away.

It now seems unbelievable that a famous star could court and marry a girl under the nose of Hollywood—and yet have nobody know about it. It seems particularly hard to believe when you realize that the girl was also in the acting profession. Yet that is what happened. Eight years ago, when George had been a Hollywood resident for two years, he met Elsie Paule—whose professional name was Susan Larson. He met her inevitably, on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot, where both were acting.

Elsie was a quiet, unpretentious girl who had never been away from home, which was Hollywood. She had grown up there, gone to Hollywood High School, and had drifted into the factory work of her home town—which was acting in the movies. She had achieved no eminence at all when she met the big, handsome, much-traveled Englishman. And their courtship certainly received no eminence. George saw to that.

They were never seen out together—not even riding in the same car, not even walking, not even talking at the studio. This absolute privacy was achieved by their driving separately to a meeting place—often the boat on which he was then living, which was in Santa Monica harbor. Throughout this time George continued the Sanders pattern of living. Take his method of lunching at the studio commissary, for instance.

Although every other actor ate with studio friends, George ate predominantly alone, with a magazine or book propped up in front of him. And when he left the studio at the day's end, he vanished as completely as if the earth had swallowed him. So did Elsie. They married in the same complete secrecy—and by the simple device of doing it openly. Instead of a hurried flight to Arizona, they saved time, trouble (and all notice) by strolling into the Hollywood Methodist Church on the sunny afternoon of October 27th, 1940. George said to the Reverend Mr. Glenn Phillips, "Will you marry us?"—and he did. It was as simple as that. On the following day, Elsie quietly resigned from her acting duties at Twentieth Century-Fox—and seemed to resign from the face of the earth.

But not George. He continued going his usual way. During the next two years an occasional rumor started that he was in love with somebody—maybe even married. When people asked him that question, he gave them one of the two Sanders treatments. Either he snapped, "That's none of your business," or he closed his eyes in a sudden cat-nap that terminated any further talk completely.

To further throw up a concealing smoke-screen he even went out publicly now and then, with lovely actresses. And he talked freely on his views on women, none of them fervent. "I do not spoil women," he said on one occasion. "I am not what is known as 'attentive.' I do not send flowers, gifts. I do none of these things because I have found it isn't necessary. I am saving all that for when I am an old man and have to." Always, however, whatever he said, whatever he did, he managed to be interesting and tantalizing.

Take an interview with him in a 1942 Photoplay in which he said: "Men have proven themselves supreme in all the arts and crafts; therefore I see no reason why women should presume to equality with us. Women often (Continued on page 72)

Toni HOME PERMANENT
THE CREME COLD WAVE
DEAR MISS COLBERT:
Several years ago I met a fellow I liked very much and would have married after suitable courtship. However, when he found out that I was a domestic, he simply dropped out of sight. This struck my pride so deeply that I went to night school and acquired credits equivalent to a college degree and a teaching certificate.

Three years ago I met this same man at a party. When he found out what I had made of myself, he began to pursue me. Nothing seems to discourage him. He is sorry for what happened before, and says he would do anything to get me to marry him. He is comfortably situated and wants me to drop teaching and simply keep house for him.

When I think of the years of sacrifice, going without friends, recreation, or decent clothing, sometimes even going hungry just to achieve my goal, I can think of him only with wondering pity. He was my goal, and nowadays I doubt that he was worth the agony.

Here is my problem: I am thirty-four years old, extremely contented with my work, and proud of my contribution to children whom I love.

However, like every woman, I want a home and children of my own. My matrimonial chances are few. This man is willing to take me on my terms, just as long as I marry him.

Should I take a chance on growing to feel a mild sort of affection for him, or should I stay in my work, which has given me real satisfaction?

Madeleine R.

In your case, I believe that it would be a tremendous tragedy for you to marry this man. It is always wrong to marry a man for any reason except that you love him and want to spend the rest of your life building a fine life with him. Marriage is work and even in cases of devoted love there are many adjustments to make.

It seems to me this man has served his purpose in your life. Don't despair of marriage—for a woman of your vitality and determination life is full of surprises. I'm certain that one of them will be a man with whom you will fall wholeheartedly in love.

Claudette Colbert

DEAR MISS COLBERT:
My husband is being transferred to a large city next month. Can you tell me what is customary about entertaining and calls, etc.? If some of the company wives call on me at home, what is the procedure in returning the calls? Should I phone first to see if they are home, or just "drop in"?

I get panicky when I think of having to entertain guests in our home, for fear each meal wouldn't go just as it should or that I wouldn’t be able to converse properly. I would even hesitate to join a church in a large city, as I know I would be called upon to help in their ladies’ groups and I don’t feel confident.

This may seem terribly trivial to you, but I do want to help my husband go as far as he can because he has already proved that he has the qualifications, so I’ll appreciate any help you can give me in fulfilling my duties.

(Mrs.) Norah M.

First of all, buy yourself a book of etiquette. Get a modern version, and read it carefully. It will give you some important information.

Customs differ in different cities. Eastern and Southern cities are still quite formal in social observances, whereas the West is not so rigid.

Although you have expressed a fear of joining in church activities, I feel that you should affiliate at once and make friends with some older woman whom you admire. Ask her to take you under her wing and help you to get started properly. Don’t be afraid to admit that you seek guidance.

If some of the wives of your husband’s business associates call upon you, it would be proper for you to return the call some afternoon or evening, without telephoning in advance. A formal call lasts only twenty minutes, a period so short that you would have no trouble in keeping the conversation rolling.

However, you should remember that all good manners are based upon thoughtfulness. When you entertain, the welfare of your guests is important, not the impression you are making. In planning a dinner find out what sort of menu would be welcome by having your husband observe his associates’ luncheon choice and report to you.

Relax, and you’ll get along fine.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I started at a new school last fall and became very popular. Then a certain boy began to pester me for dates. I didn’t think I’d like him, but I did after a few dates. He dominated me so, I dropped all my other friends. We fought all the time because he went into a jealous rage if I smiled at another boy. I liked him, so I

As soon as I began to have fun, Tommy wanted me back again. He wanted to go steady. When I said I had been through all that, he told me that I had better get rid of my other boy friends and just be his girl or he would blacken my reputation.

I'm scared to death. I never did a cheap thing in my life until I met this boy, and I won't never will again. I didn't want to encourage him to think I might grow to love him. Immediately after that he began to drink heavily, and has been in all sorts of trouble. Our parents belong to the same church and clubs. They are very close. When this boy began to misbehave, his mother came over to the house to talk it over with me. She said she thought I was being unnecessarily brutal, and that since there was no one else in my life I could be nice enough to encourage her son a little bit.

I had a few dates with him, then tried to fluff him off. He wrote me a note telling me that he was going to kill himself if we weren't married on his birthday which falls in October, 1947. I don't think he really would, but I'd feel horrible if he did.

This is making a bad situation between the families, but I don't know what to do.

Lucille W.

Obviously, this boy is a spoiled baby, pampered by his mother, who thinks that all he has to do to get what he wants is to make a scene.

From your letter I presume that you have graduated from high school and not gone on to college. I am also taking for granted that your family would be able to send you out of town to school.

I think you should enter a school at some distance, or visit relatives this summer. Usually one should not run away from a problem, but there are some problems which can be solved only by running away.

Your family should not tell this boy where you are going. You shouldn't communicate with him in any way.

The chances are excellent that if you are away this summer, and enter school this fall, the boy—like a child whose attention has been distracted—will begin to devote himself to some other girl.

I Like It Here

Furthermore, I have the most wonderful family in the world.
So, whatever success I've achieved has come comparatively easy. Too easy perhaps. And perhaps that's why small failures have assumed a false importance for me. A few disagreeable past experiences might have helped me pass through the few disappointments I have had in Hollywood less painfully. And prepared me for the challenge to come.
The most important lesson I've learned in these three years is that success is selfish. It demands all of you... all the time. The brief breather you have between pictures is filled with interviews, publicity still sittings, wardrobe fittings, make-up tests, etc. Then you're off before the cameras again.
It's essential in the beginning of any career that you direct all your talents and energy toward one goal. It's that "extra" drive you put behind yourself that pushes you to the top. It's the "extra something" that accounts for the Bette Davises and the Ingrid Bergmans in Hollywood.
Even then, it's hard going. This fact was borne out recently by Claude Rains, with whom I have been working in "The Unsuspected" at Warner Brothers, and whose opinions I respect. Claude, you know, was up for the Academy Award this year. Yet by his own measuring stick—and these are his words—"a few years ago he was a dead duck. Now his career has gone up again. If a finished actor like Claude Rains, with all his experience, can be a "dead duck," what about the future and Caufield?

I believe that anything you really want is worth the sacrifices necessary to attain it. And I have wanted ever since I can remember to become an actress. I used to go to a little dramatic school on Saturdays and afternoons after regular school. I remember when I was twelve years old doing "Pygmalion" in a white cheesecloth costume, and with utter confidence. My mother and I thought I was wonderful. I gravely doubt the others present agreed with us. Later on, at Columbia University, despite a full schedule that included an exhausting academic course, I devoted all time possible to dramatic work.

Yes, I'm sure that more than anything else, I've wanted to be an actress. For I believe that basically we all do what we really want to do.
Yet like any other girl, I want to get married. I want a home, a husband, and children. But too, I want that marriage to have a fairly even chance for success. And on the way up in Hollywood you can't waver. Your own personal happiness, if any, awaits you at the top.
But, I know that any attempt to mix movies and matrimony at this point would be fatal for me. I know Caulfield far too well. I would want to continue to give a hundred per cent to my career and give another hundred to my marriage. No matter what system you use, that's mathematically impossible.

So while my heart may say, "Go ahead, Joan, take a chance," my head keeps shaking no and at this writing my head still rules my heart.

Hollywood is very hard on romance, anyway. You go out with someone once or twice, and the startled gentleman picks up his morning paper to read where somebody says he's going to marry you. Then he's scared off. And so, in a sense, are you. You worry about whether he thinks you are in any way responsible for the matchmaking urges columnists have.

Actually, I'm still naïve enough to believe that when you meet the man for you... your man... you'll know it. What qualities am I looking for in that man? What do I want? I want stability, a sense of humor, an engaging personality. He doesn't have to be handsome or even attractive, just somebody who would be fun to spend the rest of my life with, whether he turns out to be an actor, lawyer, or an Indian Chief.

Generally speaking, I can't say that I've ever been short on self-confidence. I've always been fairly sure of myself at anything I attempted—tennis or a good Australian Crawl. And I arrived in Hollywood completely at ease. "You have nothing to worry about. Absolutely nothing," said Producer George Abbott (producer of the show I was starring in, "Kiss and Tell") when I embarked for movieland. And I was only too ready to agree with him.

This self-confidence helped me get my first break and my first heartbreak. Checking back now, I'm sure I could have handled the whole situation with more finesse and fewer tears, if I'd been more prepared for it. I really suffered at the time.

When the late Producer Mark Sandrich, who was to direct "Blue Skies," first approached me about doing the lead and asked, "Do you think you can dance and sing well enough to carry it?" I didn't have a qualm, and answered sincerely, "Sure, I can." He gave me the part.

It was a great break, starring opposite Bing Crosby. It would automatically make any newcomer a star.

Then came the sudden tragic death of Mr. Sandrich, and another producer took over "Blue Skies." The new movie maestro, together with the dancer who was set for a starring role, decided between them that I wasn't right for the part. But they neglected to inform me. Other girls were tested for the role, and finally just before the picture was ready to go I was told that other arrangements were being made, and that I was out.

I wouldn't have minded if they'd just told me at the beginning that they felt I wasn't suitable for the role. But I can't stand evasion in any form. Ironically enough, when the picture finally got under way, the producer and the dancer were out, and I got my big chance anyway. But I'll never forget those few days between...

Perhaps this was in some measure my own fault. For I am very direct, and I usually expect everybody else to be. Perhaps I should just "curve" a little now and then.

But I don't know. The worst thing one can do is to be too nice to the wrong people. If you're too nice they think you're a push-over, and believe me they push you over too. Through a few such hard-learned incidents, I've decided one must maintain a certain dignity and authority always.

On occasion, I have had a positive knack for trusting the wrong people.

For one thing, I'm much too sensitive. Though thanks to Bing Crosby, Bill Holden, Sonny Tufts and others I've worked with, I'm learning to laugh a lot more, to take little things people say or do less seriously, and to let down between scenes until it's time to pick up the cue again. However, some things still affect me out of proportion. If the rushes, for instance, look a little bad to me, my whole day is upset. But I am gradually growing up less and less.

Little things can make me very happy. A spontaneous surprise, a small act of thoughtfulness.

And never will I forget the day Director Mike Curtiz called to tell me he'd observed my work and was considering me for the lead in his picture, "The Unsuspected." This meant much as much to me as actually getting the part; just the fact that he had been thinking of me for it.

My chances for getting that role, however, were soon dimmed by the prospect of a package deal with a different studio.

"I'm sorry, Joan... I would have liked to work with you," Mr. Curtiz said. And my keen disappointment was assuaged by the fact that a great director like Mr. Curtiz would have liked to work with me.

THINKING I had lost the part, Mother and I packed up and headed back to New York to spend the Christmas holidays with my father and sister. The four of us then left for North Carolina to visit my married sister and see her new baby. We were motoring down and stopped off for the night at the John Marshall Hotel in Richmond, Virginia.

We had just registered, when I was paged by long distance for a call from Mike Curtiz asking me to return to the coast immediately for the lead in his picture. I couldn't imagine how he'd found me, since nobody in Hollywood knew where I was. He'd called New York, gotten the message that I was en route to North Carolina and might spend the night in Richmond, and had promptly put in a call to every hotel there.

There are so many factors that can change your future, some less happily. Like acquiring affectations, losing one's naturalness, and dropping a certain sense of dignity.

It's hard to keep from getting a little spoiled, with all the attention you receive; hairdressers fussing around you, wardrobe girls waiting on you, a make-up man preparing your make-up, the entire key personnel of an entire studio eternally looking out after you. To me, nobody is more repulsive than a spoiled woman. Consequently, I'm constantly underplaying, to the point of almost seeming inhibited. Which, of course, is equally bad.

As a challenge to myself I'd like to some day portray a screen character like Sadie Thompson. Complete with loud manners, wild clothing, garish make-up, spike heels, spangled jewelry, and gobs of chewing gum.

If I can play Sadie successfully, I'll have reached another movie milestone. And it will be high time for another check-up with Caulfield, for anything could happen from there on.

THE END

Joan Caulfield, with best friend Benay Venuta, and Benay's daughter Debbie. Both girls are expert tennis players and got in a few games while in Palm Springs.
It’s Like This, Louella . . .

The first time Rita separated from Orson she was very frank in saying she could not live up to his giant intellect. “You get fed up listening to how great a person he is, you get weary of so much egotism. All our conversation was about his greatness; his plans, his radio show—never anything about me, my career or our marriage.”

But after this last separation she has less to say, only, “It’s hard to enjoy life with a genius.” Perhaps she is a little on the defensive, because when she reconciled with Orson she went against the advice of her friends. For Rita, very sweet, will always take the line of least resistance. She never in her life has wanted to hurt anyone. So when Orson, apparently repentant, said he was sorry, she forgave him.

It is a great pity, I think, that Rita never has known the happiness of a contented marriage. Her two husbands were entirely different but neither was a helpmate in the accepted meaning of the word. Edward Judson, her first husband, drove her day and night. Eager for her to get ahead in her career, he never was happier than when she was a monetary success. He must, however, be given credit for inspiring her to ambition and for helping her in her earlier days: even though Rita, like many others, did not believe that his interest in her career was entirely altruistic.

To Welles, of course, money meant nothing. I doubt, too, that he counted Rita’s career important, except when it touched his own as an actor or a director. Rita, to him, was a beautiful statue, something to admire. I cannot feel he is carrying the torch for her as many columnists have said. His pride is hurt because she left him, walked out without a word.

Knowing Rita as I do, I believe she had taken just as much as she could endure when she departed for Palm Springs. Orson was so taken by surprise that he said to all inquiring reporters: “It’s ridiculous. Mrs. Welles and I have not separated. She has merely gone to Palm Springs to rest.” When it could no longer be denied that she had left him his silence could have been heard from Hollywood to New York.

When Rita telephoned me in New York after her second matrimonial break-up with Orson I thought she would tell me her troubles as she has before. But the new Rita was in evidence. The girl who shot to fame overnight—and whom I have known since she was Marguerite Cansino, a dancer at Agua Caliente—has had so many heartbreaking things happen to her that she has learned to be discreet.

“Tell me,” I said, “are you going to Europe because you want to put the ocean between you and Orson?”

“Oh, Louella, don’t say that,” she pleaded. “I’m going to Europe because I’ve never been there. I’ll go to Rotterdam, then to Amsterdam and Brussels, which they tell me is the most sophisticated of cities. And later I’ll go on to Paris and Lon’on.”

“This isn’t a case of going away to forget. It’s mostly to learn and see things I’ve never had a chance to learn or see before. I’ve always wanted to go abroad.”

“I’m going to travel with Evelyn Lane, a friend,” she went on. “I know that my daughter, Rebecca, will be all right because she is with a great aunt of mine, besides her wonderful nurse.”

“Are you glad to be rid of Orson?”

"Let's not underestimate what Orson did for me, Louella," she answered. "He helped me a lot, educationally speaking. But he is pretty difficult to live up to. I think he's best when left alone. And" she said this a little wistfully, "I think it's better for me too. I must think for myself and no one can have a personal thought that Orson doesn't want to intrude upon." I certainly agreed with her there.

"Have you ever tried living with a genius?" she asked. "Well, Orson's a genius and never forgets it. But I don't want to say too much against him because he's the father of my daughter. And I think, if you loved a man enough to marry him the least you can do, if you must part, is to say nothing against him." "Tell me, Rita," I said, changing the subject. "What's happened to your glorious long hair. You've always worn it so magnificently it's almost a trade mark with you, like Zasu Pitts's hands. Then, suddenly, it was very blonde and short and you looked like any other glamour girl!"

She laughed apologetically. "I'm letting it grow out and it will be red, I don't ever want my hair like this again."

"Orson liked it blonde and short?" I asked with a sneaking hunch that it was he who suggested it. She just laughed.

Rita wears her hair blonde and short, incidentally, in "The Lady from Shanghai" the picture which Orson directed her in just before the rift. It's the most dramatic thing she has ever done, I hear, and ends forever the idea she is just a beautiful ex-cover girl. Well, she was unhappy enough while she was making it to look dramatic.

Rita sailed on a small Dutch boat, the Veendam. She wanted to enjoy her first trip without the fanfare and glory that usually accompanies a star—particularly such a glamorous one as Rita.

My mind went back to the time I sailed in 1920 with Olga Petrova on the Rhymdam, a small Dutch boat. It, too, was my first trip to Europe and the thrill of it has always lingered. I have gone abroad many times since with my favorite doctor, but always on big boats. But somehow the memories of those large ships are not as nostalgic as my memories of that little Dutch boat, until this fall. Rita may not have known it but she will eat cheese for breakfast. That's what they served me. It's an accepted custom of the dairy-minded Dutch. What's more I'm sure she will learn to like it. As I did.

I thought Rita was wise to choose one of the smaller vessels. She will find real friends who will wish to help her. And, temporarily, I think, she needs help. The fascination that the Welles intellect—or genius, if you will—has for her must not be forgotten. Following her divorce from Judson, Welles was able to take her away from Victor Mature, who was madly in love with her, who said he could never live without her. And, later, without too much trouble, Welles recalled her from Tony Martin's side. Always Welles has been Rita's choice. It is a great pity he did not appreciate what a fine woman she is or understand how she needs love and understanding.

This time, however, I believe she will stand clear of genius. And, I think, too, when she has had time to put her marriage behind her, broken completely free from the Svengali spell of Orson, and started to live her own life—something she has not done for too long—she will be a happier and lovelier woman than ever before.

The End.
Two Men in Manhattan

(Continued from page 54) down, began trying on shoes, looked out the window — and saw a huge mob forming on the sidewalk, led by the rain-soaked boy.

"We'll be torn to shreds when we come out," Peter moaned.

"And me in my new suit," moaned Frank in return.

"There's a back door to this joint," crowed the shoe salesman.

So, Frank and Peter waved at the enormous crowd pushing against the windows, and rushed out the back way—which led right into the lobby of a building into which fifty secretaries had just swarmed on their way down from their offices at the end of the day!

"Frankie! Pete!" shrieked fifty feminine voices in unison—and all fifty girls began running for the two men. The two men began running too. They ran right through the crowd, out the door, and down the street. They were still running when they jumped into the elevator back home at the Waldorf. They were even running when they got back into the peace of their suite.

DID we say "peace of their suite"? How could we tell such lies? Their phone rang steadily, persistently, mercilessly. It was nearly always a buddy-soxer posing as a friend. To hear the names on the other end of the phone, you'd think that everyone in Hollywood was in New York. "This is Lana Turner," "Louella Parsons," "June Haver," "Mrs. Sinatra," "Betty Grable," squeaked the little voices over the telephone. The doorbell rang just as steadily—with pretty young things eagerly trying to put a foot in the door.

No, the two stars were not alone. Not ever. What's more, everything they touched became complicated... as, for instance, what Frank thought was the funniest thing that happened to them in New York:

That particular evening, Peter and Frank decided to eat dinner with separate groups of friends. Peter was going to the night club El Morocco, and Frank agreed to join him there after dinner. So, around ten o'clock, Frank breezed up to the front door of El Morocco in a taxi. He wore a sports jacket and slacks. He got one foot out on the sidewalk when the gold-decorated doorman descended on him.

"Just a minute, buddy," said that worthy. "No one's allowed in this joint without wearing a full suit. Out you go!" With which he pushed Frank back into the taxi, slammed the door, and told the cab driver to keep going.

All of this dazed and delighted Frank—who lay in the back of the taxi roaring with helpless laughter all the way to his favorite restaurant, Toots Shor's. Here, still shouting with laughter, he telephoned Peter at El Morocco and told him, "I don't dress right for the kind of places you go—they wouldn't let me in!"

Naturally, this caused pandemonium in the night-club circuit. Peter told the owner of El Morocco that Frank Sinatra had been thrown out by the doorman; the owner called up Frank (at Toots Shor's) and apologized, and swore he would fire the doorman... and Frank, being Frank, insisted that he do no such thing.

"The doorman was only carrying out orders, and he didn't recognize me besides," he said. "You shouldn't give orders if you don't expect them to be obeyed. I'll be over some other night, dressed the way I should be dressed."

But adventures like these happened regularly every twenty-four hours. Meanwhile, the two Hollywood stars carried on their New York life as best they could.
You can stay at home and still discover new things!

Housewives over the country recently made a discovery that'll be comforting news to every girl who chafes...

Women who had suffered chafe with their regular napkin tested a new, improved napkin, Free-Stride Modess. Object: to see if it gave freedom from chafe.

Verdict: 102 out of 122 reported no chafing with Free-Stride Modess.

The secret of the chafe-free comfort so many women found in Free-Stride Modess lies in the clever fashioning of the napkin edges.

Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

Walk with comfort! Try the new Free-Stride Modess!

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges don't chafe!

So safe, too! Free-Stride Modess napkin has a triple safety shield to keep you confident, carefree. On sale everywhere now. Product of Personal Products Corporation.

could. Finally they had things down to a schedule. During the daytime they worked whenever necessary—Frank on shots for their picture, singing on the Brooklyn Bridge; Peter on radio broadcasts.

When they weren't working, they went shopping. Peter bought his mother two handmade leather bags, and his father a cashmere sweater. Frank bought Nancy a broadtail coat, and his daughter Nancy Jr., a priceless treasure, 100 sticks of bubble gum! (Which was tested one evening by fifteen of Frank's friends in the ornate setting of his suite at the Waldorf!)

Rights, the schedule continued. Usually the same gang gathered for dinner at Toots Shor's: Frank, Peter, Marilyn Maxwell, Jimmy Durante, Phil Silvers, Joan Roberts, Dolores Gray, Johnny Downs, John Dall, Andy Russell, Quentin Reynolds, Florence Pritchett. After dinner, they went to a play. Then came El Morocco or the Stork Club.

And after that, they invariably went to the Copacabana nightclub for the 2:30 a.m. show—featuring Peter Lind Hayes. They never stopped marveling at the pretty chorus girls or shouting their amusement over Hayes's jokes.

Let us hastily explain here that out in Hollywood, Peter and Frankie labor from dawn to dusk before cameras, and get to bed with the chickens. New York only happens to them a few times a year, and they make the most of it.

Not that Frank's New York is the average star's New York; though. In one week, for instance, he was in three other cities—Detroit; Washington, D.C., for lunch with Postmaster General Robert Hannegan and for dinner with Joe Noonan of the Internal Revenue; Chicago, on business.

Whenever he was free in New York he ran down to do a few hours' work at his music publishing firm, "Barton Music Corporation." This firm was born in order to bring to light some of the excellent songs sent to Frank by hopeful songwriters. If the songs seem good, Frank sees that they are plugged by big orchestras and radio programs—and hence such songs as "Saturday Night is the Loneliest Night in the Week," "Full Moon and Empty Arms," and "Day by Day" have become famous.

Afternoons he posed for the celebrated sculptor Jo Davidson, who has completed a bust of Frank for the Museum of Modern Art—his singing on the Brooklyn Bridge took place only from seven until eleven in the morning, when the sun was just right. "After eleven," Frank explains with a grin, "it casts shadows under your eyes—and believe me, I had shadows under 'em already."

Frank never wears any make-up, except for a faint dusting of it in a Technicolor movie. So, as he stood on the footbridge above the Brooklyn Bridge, he was easily recognizable to the crowds of fans who drove back and forth steadily beneath him, screaming, "Hello, Frankie!"

In New York, two groups of his fans have taxis waiting always beside the door of the Waldorf; when Frank comes out—at any hour of the day or night—they give the word and their two taxis take after the one he's in. Often, since they know he eats every meal at Toots Shor's restaurant, they are there waiting for him when he arrives. "Hi, Frankie—we bet you over!" they announce as he goes inside.

The "Five Fog Sisters" did better than taxi-chasing, though. These five fifteen-year-olds telephoned Frank and Peter from Chicago that they would be in New York that evening—by air.

Peter had answered the phone, and he Lawford's phone — quick Czechoslovakia picture private to plans and hearted Peter's lot I

"Nobody," Frank rang girls. That's Peter do but go over and sit with them awhile? That's just what they did!

But it wasn't just fans who kept the phone busy for Peter—it was girls, girls, girls. He met them at parties, and they rang him up from then on—usually when Frank was alone in the suite. Frank would answer the phone, say, "This is Mr. Lawford's secretary speaking," and then laboriously write down messages for Peter. And that night, when they'd meet at some night club, Peter would ask, "Any messages for me?" Frank would grin, "I should say so" ... and pull out handfuls of them. "Nobody," Frank said at the end of the trip, "ever thought to ask my name when I answered the phone for him!"

Both Frank and Peter talked together a lot about their plans for the future—Peter's immediate plan being a light-hearted one: He wanted to cruise steadily around Hollywood in his new fire engine red convertible, which is half bright paint, and half station wagon wood. Frank's plans are more complicated. He is trying to buy a thirty-two-foot Higgins boat, a private airplane big enough for a pilot and crew, and most of all he is trying to get his picture work completed in time to go to Czechoslovakia for the World Conference of Christians and Jews.

All of these talks went on in their suite ... a suite made instantly their own. Peter's loud sports shirts were tossed around it at random. There was, also, Frank's collection of records, recording machine, boxes of cheese and crackers for quick snacks. All this was part and parcel of their mad pattern.

So was a taxi driver—they hailed one night. He wanted to be an actor, and insisted on giving a take-off on Jimmy Durante all the time he dodged his way through traffic! Behind him, of course, streamed a caravan of taxis all jammed with Sinatra and Lawford fans.

So much for the New York whirl enjoyed by the two boys from Hollywood. Can anyone deny this is a man's world? Not if the men are Sinatra and Lawford!

Hollywood Tour

To the right we see the road that curves up into Hollywood Hills. The lovely white and gaily colored houses seemed perched ready to fall into The Valley that lies on the other side. At night they’re a fairyland with their twinkling lights.

But we continue past Schwab’s Pharmacy, hang-out of such Hollywood soda-sippers as Shirley Temple, Linda Darnell and Sidney Skolsky.

And on to Sunset Strip, that stretch of boulevard between Hollywood and the sea. The “midway to movieland,” it is as clean-lined as an etching with its white stucco and neo-Spanish architecture. The Strip is famous for such glamorous establishments as: The Players, the Chanteclair, Paul Hesse’s modern photographic studios, Mocambo, LaRue’s, Ciro’s.

The winding road goes past a score of swank buildings housing offices like Sue Carol’s and Bing Crosby’s—and then around the bend, the bridal path marks Beverly Hills. Union Station is now thirty miles behind us.

Another mile to go, to the Beverly Hills Hotel—the hostel they built the town around. Up the palm-shaded drive and to the lovely swimming pool colorful with red and yellow cabanas and a real sand beach. We visit the exotic and beautiful Palm Room, for parties, such as Photoplay’s annual Gold Medal Dinner.

But now, time to unpack—and to bed—for an early start on the next day of your Hollywood Tour.

Be sure to come with us in the next issue on a tour of the Warner Studios, in famous San Fernando Valley. We’ll be seeing you.

"Who is Donna Reed?" said the stricken heathen.

"She is an actress and you are working for her."

"Already?" gasped Tony who can take things as they come but not that fast.

"Our agency has a contract to manage her," said his side-kick.

"Heavenly ordinance!" said Mr. Owen, quoting Montaigne, for Mr. Owen is a scholar and gentleman from old New Orleans, a graduate from the University of Chicago, and a literateur who earned fifteen thousand a year as saloon columnist on the Chicago Daily News.

With the variegated culture of his Chicago background, Tony quotes at will from Montaigne or Mayor Kelly or Alfonso Capone. But never in his reporting career had he picked up anything so sensational as the flash he got on beholding Miss Reed. He had scooped himself and couldn't believe it.

He leaped into his car and drove to Palm Springs to reduce his blood pressure. But his Hamlet soliloquy—"It can't be, it can be"—kept on driving him nuts. At length he achieved a sort of optimistic fatalism which by heavenly ordinance is the philosophy of the vision he was to wed. She describes it as a feeling that everything works out for the best if you just keep doing your best. Tony dashed back to Hollywood and started doing his best. He telephoned Miss Reed.

"This is Mr. Owen, your business agent, Miss Reed."

"How do you do, Mr. Owen," Miss Reed said.

"Would it be possible for you to have dinner with me, Miss Reed?"

"No," said Miss Reed, "but thank you."

"It is a business matter of some importance, Miss Reed.""

"I am sorry, Mr. Owen. Perhaps we can meet at the studio or your office."

That's the way it went for two years, "Miss Reed" and "Mr. Owen." Tony can't remember when it ended. He thinks that when he proposed he probably said, "Miss Reed, would you consider marrying Mr. Owen?"

"Anyhow it was refreshingly novel in Hollywood," says Tony. "Here everyone calls everyone by nickname on sight, or honey, or darling if you don't know the name."

Miss Reed and Mr. Owen honeymooned on the Iowa farm with Donna's folks. Relatives and friends came from all over Crawford county, and banners hung across the streets of Denison.

"After three years in Hollywood," says Tony, "I thought you had to die and go to heaven before you met such people—no one envious, no one with personal ambition but all for the family. It was heaven. I understood Donna then. She has quality; the quality of being wholly and transparently genuine."

Serenity out of fortitude is the substance of her beauty. Through her girlhood she endured with her family the desperation of ten years of heart-searing drought on the farm.

"We were able to eat because it is always possible to carry water from a well to a vegetable patch."

Her worst experience, she says, was starting high school in Denison after attending the one-room country school.

Denison was a dizzy metropolis of four thousand people. For a country girl, breaking into school activities was a struggle of titanic perseverance.

Her greatest moment in life occurred when these kids elected her their Queen of May, "for grace, for looks, for personality and popularity."

But her original patent of nobility rests on a pan of biscuits. She won a prize and membership in the 4-H clubs. These 4-H clubs constitute the nobility of red-blooded democracy. You can't get in to them by the simple process of being born; you have to do something essential for mankind, such as raising bulls or biscuits.

DONNA came to Los Angeles to visit an aunt and remained to work her way through City College. Her fellow students elected her their campus queen. The newspapers published her picture. Within twenty-four hours three studios were on the telephone requesting her to make tests but Donna graciously declined until she had her diploma in secretarial efficiency.

With her performance in "It's a Wonderful Life" she was enthroned queen for the third time. Peers of the realm paid homage after the premiere. King Gable pressed her hands and bestowed his accolade, "Swell, Donna, you've arrived."

William Wyler, the Oscar-studded director of "The Best Years of Our Lives," made his bow saying, "My name is Wyler; I'm a director and I hope for the privilege of directing you one day."

Donna was moved but not giddied by the starry coronation. You never can top the triumph of your own home town, and no performance can surpass a pan of biscuits that wins a 4-H prize.

Donna's ambition is to have a family of children as fine as her brothers and sisters, and to be as good a mother as her own, to whom each week she types three letters. She and Tony adopted a baby girl. Before they saw her they chose the name Penny Jane. Jane is the name of Donna's grandmother. Tony's oldest Hollywood friend, Randy Scott, suggested Penny. Tony liked the name Mary. A penny was tossed and Penny won. The baby co-operated by growing copper colored hair, which she changed to black and now to gold—already she has gone Hollywood.

The Owens would like to have a little place in the country and wear sloppy clothes, but in these days of housing shortage beggars can't be choosers and have to live in palaces. They have traded a beach lot they owned for a shelter with five bedrooms and five baths in Beverly.

The house is L-shaped, opening inward on a patio which is an outdoor living room, the other two sides having walls tapestried with flowering vines. Windows of the one-story living room open into it; the two-story wing has glass porches upstairs and down.

Donna has no hobbies, belongs to no societies except City College alumnae. She works with intensity. Her husband calls her a perfectionist. She likes low-heeled shoes and slacks and her favorite colors are blue and green.

In people, sincerity and naturalness are her only demand. Dorothy McGuire and Ingrid Bergman are her favorite actresses; Jimmy Stewart ranks among men, with Cary Grant runner-up. Plain food is preferred. For a treat she will take a cheese-burger.

The Owens do not care for big parties but entertain for a few friends. Their closest are Mr. and Mrs. Randy Scott, director George Sydney and his wife Lillian Burns, the drama coach of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer. Donna says Lillian made possible all dramatic achievement and is virtually her alter ego. Tony says its mutual worship.

TONY now is partner in the Orsatti-Owen Agency, business representatives for stars and directors. He will probably end up a producer. He says he would rather be a newspaperman than anything, a beachcomber next. He likes to call himself Pop Owen. That's what he was called by the kids in his horse cavalry unit at Port Riley. When war broke, passing up the chance of being an officer, he enlisted as a buck because that's what he felt like doing. He thanks God he did.

"I got to know the finest kids in this country, most of them cowhands and farm boys of the west."

When he was discharged from the hospital where he was laid up with a broken foot, the kids chipped nine dollars and five cents out of their pay to buy Pop a present. Pop says that will always be the big moment of his life.

Two years ago when producer Carey Wilson read the prize-winning novel "Green Dolphin Street" by Elizabeth Goudge, he was struck by a passage describing the character of Marguerite. It was, he recognized, a perfect delineation of Donna Reed.

The passage that designated Donna for the part, reads: "Transparent honesty and purity and serenity that, like clear water flooding over the bed of a stream, washes away uncleanness, and makes fresh and divinely lovely all that is seen through its own transparency."

In "Green Dolphin Street," all who have seen it agree, Donna will add jewels to her crowns.

The End

They started building their home in February of last year, less than two months after they were married. Paul had owned the land for some time, and the fun of planning their own house was part of the lovely excitement of their honeymoon. Yet like many another house in these United States, it stands, some eighteen months later, like a beautiful movie set, not quite all there. Its architect was Walter Wurde- man, one the men who designed Holly- wood’s famed “House of Tomorrow.”

THE Brinkman house, compared to “The House of Tomorrow,” is the House of the Next Century. It has gadgets that do everything but make a suit of clothes.

In the kitchen one button makes the dishes all wash themselves. Another makes the garbage chew itself into eternity. The ice cubes, on command, fly out of the box and into the glasses. The heat comes on or goes off, the cooling air wafts through during the summer, the solid plate glass windows, which run to the floor in all the rooms and act as doors as well as windows, open and close themselves. The indoor barbecue turns its own spit; so does the out-door one.

Don’t ask why two barbecues. So did Mr. Wurde- man—and it got him nowhere except with orders to go ahead with them. So he did. The Brinkmans, it seems, are great steak eaters. Mr. Wurde- man got orders to go ahead with three fireplaces— in what is now a one-story “modern” ranch house with only two master bed- rooms—so those are there, in beautiful fieldstone.

The fireplaces, you may be sure, have gas under them—just as the barbecues have —so that there’s no trouble getting them “to start.” The electric gates open themselves, on command, by telephone, just as the electric clock sounds its own alarm and the front door answers its own buzzer.

The woodwork—what there is of it and it isn’t much, as the house is mostly of glass and stone—is red oak, left its natural shade and waxed—and the bathroom walls are vitrolite, which means the housekeeping is reduced to a minimum. The garage is a “port” rather than what you and I know as a garage. You drive right into a kind of glorified box, that has an overhang but no doors, so that all opening and closing trouble is eliminated.

Naturally, being a future-looking house, it has its own deep-freeze unit, which eventually will have to do something about the fruit from the forty varieties of fruit trees now planted about the house. (The

Our marriage was all thorns . . .

Ned was habitually bristling like a cactus, over nothing at all . . . was seldom his sweet, loving self any more. What had happened to our perfect marriage? Why, this: I only thought I knew about feminine hygiene. I didn't realize that careless now-and-then care could spoil one's married happiness . . . until my doctor enlightened me. Yes—then, he recommended using "Lysol" brand disinfectant for douching—always.

Now it's love in bloom

Happiness is, to the heart, as sunshine to a flower . . . and we're so happy again now! Ever since I began following my doctor's advice on feminine hygiene—always use "Lysol" for douching. No more salt, soda or other homemade solutions for me! Not when far more effective "Lysol"—a real germ-killer—is so easy and economical to use. As the doctor said, "Lysol" is a thorough yet gentle cleanser . . . and it works!

Brinkmans are fruit crazy as well as steak crazy.) They haven't yet got a gadget that will pick that fruit for them but they have got an outdoor trick that will shake you with excitement. They built, believe it or not, a waterfall, up in those hills where there's not so much as a rill.

Paul worked that one out, by means of pipes and a lot of planning. The water jumps up the mountain behind their house—a right smart jump, too, of better than a hundred feet—and comes tumbling down again, whenever they want it.

In fact, their whole estate lacks only two things to make them blissful (besides being finished and furnished): Paul wants to find an ice-cream freezer that can be buried in some electrified nook of the kitchen and turn out a neat two quarts daily, since he and Jeanne consume that much. Jeanne wants a real live fawn to romp about the place. She's had to give up her lion cub—of which more later.

But while it is faintly irksome not to have every last doorknob and window latch in place, it is absolute bliss to have the house virtually unfurnished.

This is because they were so jammed during the six months prior to Paul Jr.'s birth that the only free space they had in their three-room Santa Monica apartment was their beds. They slept in the beds, they ate in them, they sat on them. Every other inch of space was stacked with clothes and presents for the baby.

For some reason, most of Jeanne's fans chose to send her knives and forks for "Junior." Along with basins, comforters, carriage throws, she's got enough silverware to stock a jewelry store. But Jeanne said the future baby Brinkmans will inherit it all from little Paul.

On Easter Monday there was a story printed that Jeanne had been so sure her baby would be a girl, she hadn't known what to name her child. That wasn't true. Actually, Jeanne had always insisted that her baby would be a boy, and that he had to be called Paul Jr. Paul Sr., being the more worldly, said they'd better prepare for a girl, too, but he insisted if she happened, she must be Jeanne too.

The great gift that Jeanne has is that of making her dreams come true. The happiness that Paul can bring to her is the masculine strength that backs up her dreams and shares them.

For example, "Margie" was her first "mother" role. Jeanne was enchanted with it. On screen, she seems to wait through her characterizations, but behind that airy fineness, there is much hard work and, more important, careful, hard thinking. One of the pleasures she and Paul share is reading aloud to one another, and this they did particularly with the script of "Margie." Long before it got to the screen, Jeanne was playing "Margie" at home, with Paul playing all the male parts, for her amusement and instruction. So, when during the actual filming, Jeanne discovered she was truly to become a mother, it was her third happiest moment. (The first had been falling in love with Paul, the second marrying him on New Year's Eve, 1945.)

She never went through any odd "yearnings," like for strawberries at midnight. She made only one request of Paul. "Let's stay at ourselves as much as we can," she begged. "Let's have it just be us alone during this great experience."

Her slightest wish is Paul's only desire. For the first three years, until they saw a friend or two but during the last six they never "dated" with anyone except their families, and that was only on Sundays. They had "brunch" every Sunday noon with Mrs. Crain and Jeanne's lovely younger sister, Rita. At six, they moved on to Paul's parents and had dinner with them.

Other than that, they did nothing but visit their house, and watch the orchard being planted, and the flowers put in and in the space for the waterfall being dug out. They read to one another evenings, saw occasional movies, and Jeanne took up water color painting, turning out sketches of crazy, wild animals and charming little children which are now being turned into a frieze for Paul Jr.'s nursery.

The Saturday evening before Easter, they went to see "The Egg and I." The baby was then about two weeks overdue but Jeanne wasn't feeling too uncomfortable. While she laughed at the picture, she felt a twinge or two of pain but she ignored it. They had huge hot-fudge sundae's before returning to the apartment and were just nicely settled in their beds when Jeanne said, "Paul, where's your stop watch?"

The stop watch had been one of her Christmas presents to her husband. Working over his radius, Paul often haddesired split second timing. But it is to be doubted if a stop watch has often been used to time labor pains, as it was on this occasion—and seldom that any father knew such pains were being spaced exactly seven minutes, and twenty seconds apart. In fact, Paul didn't know that for more than ten minutes and forty seconds before he had Jeanne in the car heading toward The Queen of the Angels. They cut the hospital gates at 12:30 and at 5:13.10 on the stop watch, Paul Jr. made his debut.

Ask Jeanne which one of them the baby looks like and she adds, "Exactly like Paul." Ask Paul and his dark, distinguished face glows and he announces, "He's the image of Jeanne." Ask me or any other observer of this baby of babies and we'll tell you it looks identical with both of them.

Only one thing had worried Jeanne during the nine months. She was frightened that she might have a "bald" baby. Why, with such heads of hair as she and Paul have this idea ever occurred to her, nobody will ever know.

They gave her only a spinal, so she heard her baby's first cry, whereupon she demanded to know its sex, and to see it. She took one glance and relaxed. "Oh, what beautiful hair he has," she sighed happily.

The doctor snorted at her. "Look at his shoulders," Dr. Alphonsus McCarthy said. "I never saw such shoulders. You'd better register for the Notre Dame team tomorrow morning."

Little Paul has very dark hair, like his father and very blue eyes like his mother. Being the first grandchild in either family, but the older sets are wildly happy. In fact, there's only one creature who isn't thrilled over his advent. That's Jeanne's lion cub. She got banished to a private zoo. That broke Jeanne's heart almost as much as it did the cub's—but the doctor wouldn't hear of his being around such a wonder child. But right in that small, empty spot in Jeanne's wild-animal-loving heart is where the fawn may come in.

That is, unless the second baby makes her forget about fawns, too. For already Jeanne is planning for another baby. He will be, Jeanne says, another boy and his name will be Michael Anthony Brinkman. Paul grins. Paul says he would like it if he turned out to be a she, Jeanne Crain Brinkman. Second. But he knows she hasn't a chance. For Jeanne always makes her dreams come true, which is what Paul wants for her, forever and always.

The End
THE RAZOR'S EDGE: Tunes like "Mam'selle" have a way with them and young singer Art Lund has crashed the juke box big time with his fine pressing (M-G-M). Close behind him in popularity are the Dennis Day (Victor) and Pied Pipers (Capitol) versions.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Phil Harris selects the hit tune "Poppa, Don't Preach To Me" from Betty Hutton's latest and has a Harrised field day with it (Victor).

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN: Frank Sinatra clicks with "Time after Time," "I Believe," "Brooklyn Bridge" and "It's the Same Old Dream" (Columbia). The Pied Pipers (Capitol) and Tommy Dorsey (Victor) also handle the latter tune effectively, while Jimmy Dorsey (M-G-M) wraps up "Time after Time" and adds a sure-fire Latin-American winner, "Quien Sabe?" on the reverse.

THE EGG AND I: It was inevitable that this intriguing title would wind up with a melody. It took four tunesmiths, including Al Jolson, and now you can hear Dinah Shore (Columbia) and Sammy Kaye (Victor) spin it.

JANE RUSSELL: "The Outlaw" girl will probably get more circulation with the record she made with Kay Kyser than she will with the controversial horse opera. The tune she sings is called "As Long As I Live" (Columbia).

NORA PRENTISS: The theme song is aptly titled "Who Cares What People Say" and Dinah Shore (Columbia) sings it.

THE UNINVITED: Billy Butterfield (Capitol) and Dennis Day (Victor) have just waxed the film's haunting theme "Stella by Starlight" and it was worth waiting for.

CARNEGIE HALL: Lily Pons sings "The Bell Song" from "Lakme," Ezio Pinza sings a robust aria from Mozart's "Don Giovanni" and Rise Stevens has a fine time with "Seguidilla" from "Carmen" in an impressive Columbia album.

HUMORESQUE: Now, happily, Columbia has just issued an album of Isaac Stern's, re-creating the same immortal melodies he bowed in the film, including the title song by Dvorak, Rimsky-Korsakov's "Flight of the Bumble Bee," the Carmen Fantasy and Sarasate's Gypsy Airs. The piano accompaniment is by Oscar Levant.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: For religious records, try Victor's new album of Bach's Cantata No. 4, as performed by the RCA Chorale and Orchestra, under Robert Shaw's baton, and a reading of his own poems by Francis Cardinal Spellman, elegantly transcribed by Victor . . . The musical delicacy of Mozart's Quartet No. 2 in E Flat Major for piano and strings is played by the Budapest String Quartet and pianist George Szell for Columbia . . . A new pressing of Gershwin's "Rhapsody in Blue" by Paul Whiteman is a Signature feature . . . The pretentious orchestrations of Morton Gould get a full dress airing by the Robin Hood Dell orchestra in a Columbia album with Gould conducting. Highlight is Gould's version of the stirring Red Calvary March . . . Sibelius' solemn Symphony No. 4 is ably interpreted by the N. Y. Philharmonic, conducted by Artur Rodzinski for Columbia . . . The same company has issued a package of Italian operatic arias by the Met's soprano Helen Traubel, a singer of impressive and physical proportions . . . Beethoven's immortal Moonlight Sonata played by Vladimir Horowitz is a Victor musical gift . . . The interesting ballet suite by Handel, "The Great Elopement," is disked by its favorite delineator, Sir Thomas Beecham, with the London Philharmonic in a new Victor issue.
The Lie

It had been working fine. Until this moment, that is, when before he'd had time to get rid of it, the crumpled bread had dropped into view. The nurse's voice was taking on a more ominous emphasis: "Who is responsible for this?" she pointed a long finger at the crusts. No one spoke—not even Bob.

"I'm giving you one more chance to step out of line. Come now—speak up and step out." The words were a clarion call which many years later, Bob would be able to liken to "The Voice of Gabriel." At seven, however, they struck pure, wordless terror to his heart. He couldn't have opened his dry little mouth if someone had promised to drop a shiny new dollar inside.

"A-1-1-right, I'll come get you!" She was advancing down the line now, her finger extended like a dagger. He closed his lids tight, his breath stopped and his skinny body tensed to meet its doom...

"You bad—sneaky—little boy!" A hand whooshed through the air—stitched—and there was another whoosh as a youngster went flying out of line. Not Bob—but the red-headed kid in front of him. "Not speaking up is even worse than lying!"

"Yesm—" The redhead stood patiently, under the pelting words, showing no surprise, his freckles only slightly more prominent than usual. Somehow, he was always falling into crime—it seemed useless to deny this one. Bob's mouth, too, stayed tight-closed.

There still seemed no way to force it open when that afternoon, the youngsters went trouping out into the clear mountain air to play health games in the sun. In the evening there was a special ceremony—Red in the middle of the ring of teachers and kids, making public apology for those sneaked-out crusts. And instead of his helping of custard pie, gulping down an extra, full-day's ration of bread.

That night, Bob could hear Red breathing soundly, a couple of cots away. In some inexplicable way, however, he himself remained miserable. He had a kind of sore throat—not a regular one, but a sort of lump that seemed to want to spread out and choke him...

THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD Bob Moseley kicked the dust along the road from Bakersfield Public School No. 2, and whistled absent-mindedly. Tanned, and with a thatch of sun-burnt hair, he was feeling—if he had been thinking about it—like a young man who'd never even heard of a health resort for underweight children.

Happened, however, he was thinking of the couple of hours stretch until chowtime. A couple of hours so far uncharted, and offering some very fine possibilities. There was, for instance, the possibility of taking his brother Harold for a walk through the fields and showing him how to scare up rabbits. Or, of getting together with his pal Bill and a couple of other kids for hide and seek.

Bill, it turned out, was waiting for him. "Got somethin' to show you," he said, walking off with a mysterious air toward the barn. Not until he stood over a nest behind the feed-box would he speak further. The nest had a half-dozen eggs.

"Look—all rotten. Good and stinkin' rotten. Ol' settin' hen walked off and left 'em."

Bob, for the moment, was too envious to speak. Actually, the hoard being Bill's, it was his place to do the speaking, anyhow. "Let's throw 'em," snidely.

Guy Madison, Seaman First Class, dropped his six-foot length off a Sunset Boulevard bus, dashed through traffic and stopped up short and breathless at the entrance to the Palladium. He had a date to meet a young lady and he was five minutes late. This young lady, maybe—but it wasn't the girl in the bright red coat—or the one wearing daisies for a hat. Funny, he'd thought she'd know her at once. She was short and brown-haired, with a quick smile, and he'd danced with her last week at the Canteen. He'd never seen her in a coat or hat, however, and he'd been totally unprepared for the number of short, brown-haired girls who could pass through one lobby...

It was at this point he became conscious of the two Shore Patrols staring at him. Usually, people did stare at him—a gold-bronze fellow with unbelievable shoulders, gob-cap riding high on hair the color of a ripe wheat field. Usually, too, he remained unconscious of the stares. However, no sailor stays unconscious of an S.P. very long.

"Just a minute, Mac." The two S.P.'s had planted themselves squarely in front of him. "What Navy do you belong to?"

"Same one you do, I believe," said Guy. "What's your name?" snapped one of the patrolmen.

"Guy Madison," he answered quickly, the way he did now that he was getting used to it.

"Got your liberty pass?"

"My I.D. card is my pass."

"Let's see it!"

Too late, Guy realized he was in trouble. The patrolman glanced at the card briefly. "We're taking you in. You won't mind the walk—it's just around the corner."

Guy hoped the brown-haired girl wouldn't think he hadn't shown up. It should only take him a few minutes to explain to the desk sergeant...

"Him and his I.D. card aren't tellin' the same story," said one S.P. to the sarge. "The card says his name is Moseley."

"Well, you see, I changed my name when I signed my Selznick Studio contract. I——"

"A movie contract—now isn't that glamorous? Only it says here, you're under contract to the Guy with the Whiskers, for the duration."

"I am. That is——"

"Never mind the story," said the Sarge. "I might listen to it if it wasn't for the fact that the cellophone has been opened on your card. You aren't the first guy who altered his I.D. card and got caught at it."

Just how and when the cellophone had broken loose from the brass brads on his identification, was something Guy didn't know. He did know what an arrest would do to his chances for Officers' Candidate School. The thing had been on for so long—that meant more to him than any date or movie job in the world.

The day Guy Madison knew that in spite of his service record, he was definitely out of the running for O.C.S. he felt like a fellow who'd swallowed a rock. On the other hand, he felt curiously clean and free of a couple of things that had been bothering him for years. That time he'd told the truth and they hadn't believed him—but he'd had it coming. Little Red, choking down those extra slices of bread so long ago, had been paid off. He'd squared the matter of the eggs too.

That's why the star of "Honeymoon" is a guy who's never afraid to say what he has on his mind. Why the harder a thing is to say, the quicker he'll say it. "Right or wrong—I'd rather take my chances on it," he'll tell you.

And meeting his straight gaze, you know chances are he'll be right many times more than he'll be wrong!

(Continued from page 53) her initials to papers and that made her an Elk. Her pet name, that is, what she likes to be called when you know her chummy, is Eivan. And if you go to her, "got the information while we were sitting on the couch in my office—gee, director Al Green would hardly give me any room and kept crowding me."

"I also found out that after attending various schools, Eivan wanted to be an actress. She started by being a tap dancer. It was while she was dancing in Charlotte, North Carolina, that she met Ted Ford, the band leader. She told him about her desire to be a movie actress and he gave her a letter to a number of people in Hollywood. He also told her that she wouldn't get anywhere in pictures until she got rid of her Southern drawl. She was finally given a job by Cecil B. DeMille in 'The Buccaneer' as a Southern belle with a drawl."

"Typically Hollywood," said the columnist. "Well tell me more about her career."

"Gee, I believe a guy like you would know that. The more I talk to you the more I learn about columnists. Eivan later played a part in 'Gone with the Wind.' A Southern gal, of course. This was an epic, as you know, so of course no one remembers her in it. In fact she doesn't boast about her role in it."

After this she was signed by Columbia Pictures and it looked as if she might get places fast. She was the leading lady for Robert Montgomery in 'Here Comes Mr. Jordan' and she also had a lead in 'Ladies in Retirement.'

"And what happened?" asked the columnist.

"I can take a cue," replied the producer, still surprised that the columnist didn't know as much about Eivan Keyes as the producer did. She played in a number of pictures at Columbia, was well liked, but really didn't click until she met up with Technicolor."

"That's odd."

"Not so very. It happens. Betty Grable didn't get anywhere until she was filmed in Technicolor. Eivan played the lead in 'Renegades' and then people, fans and executives, began to notice her. They noticed that she was not only attractive, but also a fine actress, a mighty fine actress."

And I'll tell you something else. The combination in 'Renegades' was Evelyn Keyes—LARRY PARX. That's where the teamwork started. Evelyn's next picture is tentatively titled, 'The Mating of Millie Mcgonigle' and a leading man in this picture will be Larry Parks. They're getting to know each other and it seems to be working out very well."

"That's fine," said the columnist to the producer. "But now let's get back to you and Evelyn. What did you do? Start revealing."

"I must admit," said the producer, "that we held hands on the couch. She has lovely hands. Only, sometimes I got mixed up and found I was holding Al Green's hands. And we did drink wine. It was blonde in the picture. Before that her hair had been pink, yes, actually pink. It has been practically every shade. Sometimes even her best friends don't recognize her because of the color of her hair. You've got to know her real well to know her."

"Keep going," said the columnist.

"Our romance then continued on the set. Eivan is a hard worker. She comes on the set prepared, knowing her lines and how she intends to interpret a scene. She is rather stubborn and determined, but she will listen to the director or producer. Later, in a projection room when she looked at the rushes with me, she was never completely satisfied with her performance. She always found fault and insisted that she could play the scene better if given another opportunity."

"Ah, so you two were together, alone, in a projection room," said the columnist. He was leaning, snooping.

"Certainly," replied the producer. "It was all in the line of duty. Then often we'd go dinner together. It didn't have to be a famous restaurant for Evelyn. She prefers a near, cozy place. Her taste in food varies and she'll eat practically anything. She doesn't actually eat much. She orders big, but she merely nibbles at her food. Then we'd go to her apartment and sit around. But her girl friend, Marguerite Chapman, would be there, and do you know she took almost as much room on the couch as Director Green. A fellow wants to be alone to be romantic."

"We'd sit around there and discuss the picture and books and the world in general. Evelyn likes to sit at the piano and play a little. Her favorite is Chopin."

"You two appeared to be getting along famously," said the columnist. "I like it. Keep on revealing."

"I liked it too," replied the producer. "I even went to watch her play tennis, went shopping with her and for walks in Beverly. But then it happened."

"What happened?" asked the columnist, more eager than he had been.

"It was on the set early one morning as usual," said the producer. "And do you ever see Evelyn?"

"Certainly I see her," answered the producer. "We're still the best of friends—in the true Hollywood tradition. I visited her on the set of 'Johnny O'Clock,' and she appeared just as happy in her work, eager to make good."

"Okay, so Evelyn married John Huston. He's a famous director and writer. She's an actress. What will happen to their careers?"

"They're both doing great," answered the producer. "Evelyn doesn't tell John what pictures to direct or how to write his stories. She does, and she doesn't expect him to select her scenarios or to tell her how to play a part."

"That's unusual."

"They do, however, discuss movies in general and actresses and actors. They have ideas about the kind of pictures they should make and the kind of pictures that should be made. They do like to be around people in the film industry. They talk shop. They're interested in what they call 'the arts.' John paints, you know, and Evelyn is playing with painting."

"Do you believe that they'll ever make a picture together?" asked the columnist."

"That's an obvious question," replied the producer, "and the answer is just as obvious. They would like to make a picture together, but they are going to wait until they find the proper story. But, what's more important, they want to wait until they know each other better. It's something that they have all day on the set and then go home and be with the same person all night."

"Yes, I guess it is," said the columnist. "Keep revealing."

"Well," said the producer, "they reside in Huston's house in Tarzana, which he designed himself. It has all kinds of furniture, Colonial, modern, anything that looks good and is comfortable. Her pet name for him is Johnnie and his pet name for her is Eivan."

"Ooooh! Ooooh!" exclaimed the columnist, as he asked the world's most important question. Then he added, "Keep revealing."

"Gee, doesn't a columnist know anything else than 'Keep revealing.' he growled. "I mean the one to get rid of a columnist. Reveal everything."

The producer leaned a little more forward and then said: "Eivan, pardon me, Evelyn, sleeps in an oversized built-in bed. There are two Spotlights on the ceiling, one for Evelyn and one for John, which are used as reading lamps. They like to read in bed. And—and say, how revealing do you expect a fellow to get if you want to know any more you have to ask John Huston who has the information."

It was then that Skolsky, the producer, declared that he had had enough of Skolsky, the columnist. But it was okay, for the columnist had also decided that he had gotten enough of the producer. The End

LOUISE ALLBRITTON is, above all, Mrs. Charles C. Collingwood of New York these days. But occasionally she leaves her husband, the well-known radio commentator, and journeys to Hollywood to make a motion picture, most recently Universal-International's adaptation of that realistically amusing best seller "The Egg and I"
In reality Veronica Lake is perhaps more beautiful than on the screen. She's warmer, too, than you expect her to be, more just-folks, with a soft, low voice that's as provocative as her triangular face. And she wears her hair in a modified version of the style she made famous—falling softly down one side of her face, although she usually keeps it pinned back at one side or worn simply in a net.

When Veronica arrived for Photoplay's fashion sitting she was wearing a trim little black suit, the jacket edged with black braid, repeated in the buttons. Her only jewelry was her first Valentine gift from her husband—a quaint heart-shaped gold carriage drawn by two miniature horses. The heads of the little figures in the carriage were rubies. So were the hubs and the tires of the wheels.

On her head, binding her pale gold hair, was one of her favorite headbands—a strip of crushed black jersey. Veronica has these bands, which hook in the back, made in all colors and materials to go with different dresses. For evening wear she adorns them with fresh flowers.

In the studio that day were photographer Ben's son Alan and a pal of his, Donald Shook. They had come down from the country especially to see Veronica. Alan had brought his camera and when Veronica posed in the blue and pink plaid dress, he circled around, snapping away.

"It would be awfully funny," Veronica told Ben, "if your son's pictures turned out better than yours!"

In spite of her siren looks, Veronica is very much of a homebody. She's a Brooklynite by birth, although she lived most of her life in Lake Placid and Miami Beach. She's an expert skier and swimmer and she and her husband are ardent flyers—own their own plane. Veronica can't take passengers up yet since she only has her student's license.

Veronica didn't intend to be an actress. It was an accident. Strangely enough, so was her first movie hair-do. Her hair would fall into her face and a director, seeing it, insisted she keep it that way in front of the camera.

For Veronica's New York visit Edith Head designed a special ensemble; a tiny black basque jacket to alternate with three skirts, all slightly longer than ballerina length. One skirt was of black taffeta, one black and white taffeta and the other chartreuse and black. With any one of the three costumes this ensemble provides Veronica wears black plastic soles and heels through which she strings ribbons of the same fabric as her dress.

It was Veronica's first visit to New York in four and a half years. She found the cafes, theaters and crowded streets as exciting as always. And New York found her as exciting as always, too.

Fabulous Fairbanks

Five years is a long time, but Doug Fairbanks Jr. found it was not too long

BY RALPH CARSON

WHEN Douglas Fairbanks Jr. returned to the States after five years of Naval Service abroad, he wondered about his reception. In uniform overseas he created no more excitement than any other officer with his rank. "But how will it be at home," he wondered. "Will people still remember me? Five years is a long time and the public is fickle."

His first role—that of Sinbad the Sailor—waited on the shelf at RKO until Doug was free. And then he had to be talked into taking the part. When the Navy was ready to release him, Fairbanks wanted rest. He wanted to spend all his time with his wife and two daughters.

But RKO wouldn't be denied. The colorful fiction Sinbad who roamed the Mediterranean in 800 A.D. needed a Fairbanks to breathe life into the screen version. So John Twist, who wrote the original screen story, was dispatched to Washington with orders to live with Doug if necessary in order to sell him the idea. Like all good salesmen, John "sold" the story first to Mrs. Fairbanks; pretty little Mary Lee.

So on this occasion when she added her vote to the studio's, Doug was convinced. He would not only play Sinbad, but his would be the final say-so on script and cast. Back in Hollywood, Doug went to work on a job he knew and loved. He moved into a tiny office on the RKO lot. At home he built an outdoor gymnasium on the tennis court. In the early morning he trained there with ex-Army Captain Dave Sharp. Like his father before him he never uses a stunt man.

On one particular occasion this training stood him in good stead. It happened on an island near Capri, early in 1943. Doug and six other American officers were sent on a pre-invasion check of the situation. Creeping noiselessly around the small island they happened upon an estate housing some Nazi bigwigs. The front of the house was protected by a heavy oaken door.

So they stealthily made their way around the back. There a twelve-foot wall separated them from the house. The group drew back into the shadows to consider the possibilities. One of the officers kept looking at Doug. Finally he spoke up: "I've seen you do it a hundred times in the movies. Come on, boy, upsadaisy." (Continued on page 121)
A midsummer dream, this hat— if we ever saw one! The crown is covered with stiffened net. The flowers are the soft lovely pastel shades that blend with every color. Tom Breneman, creator of this hat (and the hats Louise Allbritton wears on pages 102 and 103), started designing millinery as a lark. Master of Ceremonies on ABC’s daily morning coast-to-coast hook-up, “Breakfast in Hollywood,” Tom went on a cross-country tour. Everywhere, in St. Louis, Denver, Chicago, Omaha and other large cities, women fans besieged him with the same request. Would he, please, select a hat for them when he got back home. Returning to Hollywood, at last, Tom went into a huddle with Caspar-Davis, one of Hollywood’s suavest designing teams. Result: The Tom Breneman millinery enterprise, which creates twelve new and exciting hats every month with their prices ranging from $18 to $25. So when you want the last word in a glamorous chapeau you’ll find it in a Breneman hat.

Black patent leather accessories, such as shoes, bag or belt, are smart and right with your colorful cotton dresses. Wear a big cool black straw hat and pick up your dress color in a garland of flowers around the brim.

There’s nothing like a “conversation piece” in the way of jewelry. These three pieces by Coro will cause plenty of talk! The safety pin is about three and one-half inches long. The head is studded with turquoise and pearls. Price is $2.00. The gold crown job with medallion pin is wonderful to pin on a scarf, and it costs $2.00. The “Pirate” earrings are the newest thing in ear adornment. They are $3.00.

There always comes a time in a girl’s life when she needs a pair of clean white gloves in a hurry. These nylon gloves with shell stitching around the fingers are just the thing for they dry in an hour or two and, after each washing, look brand new. The other pair of gloves is cotton with adorable blue forget-me-nots embroidered in beading on the backs. They look so sweet and dressed up with light summer dresses. Both these gloves are by Aris. The price of the nylons is $2.00. The cotton ones with beading are $2.95.

Here’s a new fad that has arrived from Hollywood. The movie belles are wearing small silk handkerchief scarfs (about the size of a regular man’s hankie) knotted tightly around the throat with summer suits and dresses. The smaller pure silk square in the picture above would be perfect for this attractive fashion. Wear it tied under the collar of a shirt or knotted through your belt. A scarf like this tied high around your neck also adds a new look when worn with bare necked blouses or sun dresses. It comes in heavenly clear colors and the price is $2.00. The larger scarves are tissue rayon, a fabric so soft and light in the hand that it feels like a bit of gossamer. They are $3.00. All these are designed by Glentex.

“Three little mothers” to be were huddled together on a bench under the Bowman’s magnolia tree at Connie’s luncheon—all of them gabbing like mad as to whether their coming events would be boys or girls. I mean Jeanne Crain, who is now a Ma, and not in doubt, Lili Morris (Chester Morris’s pretty wife) and Anne Shirley, who only a few days before had announced to the world that she’d soon have a new baby of her own to take the place of the one she heartbreakingly lost in England several months ago. June Allyson was there looking cute as a button in a white angora sweater over a black crepe. And while on the subject of accessories, Junie had her initials embroidered over her heart—but in black sequins.

Evie Johnson, looking cool in a silk print that had black and white painter’s palettes all over a dark green background, was denying reports that she and Vanny boy are to be rocking a cradle soon. But then, they denied they were going to get married too, if you remember. Oh—almost forgot to “finish” Evie’s dress. A soft three-inch ruffle of the same print outlined its wide cancan neckline. And the skirt had hip driving that ended in the center with a cascading drape to the hem. She wore black shoes, gloves and bag. No hat. I noted too, that smart, comfortable and right for any time of the day or evening is the obvious determination of Hollywood gals who are “expecting” not to go in for “maternity clothes” in the accepted sense, but to stick for the most part to simple hip-length, flaring smocks over dark skirts. Whether at lunch, on shopping tours, cocktail or dinner parties, you see them in their smocks—ranging from crisp linens through tailored gabardines, crepes and taffetas. Some are simple—some elaborately trimmed—but all are smocks.

Connie made a terrific haul in the way of gifts for the baby. But the gift that got the loudest “Ah’s” and “Oh’s” when it was opened was Anita Colby’s. She had brought two large, solid gold safety-pins. At least four females yelled, “How CHIC can a baby be?” when the gift was unwrapped. Connie says you can bet the pins will wind up on her when the infant no longer has any use for them. She’s so right!

Before I get off the accessory subject entirely, mustn’t forget to tell you about a cute gag some of the local belles are wearing—and getting lots of attention with. Wouldn’t be surprised if it turned into a national fad. The gag is arm garters (yes, real old-fashioned ones)—but with a “something-new-has-been-added” touch. The arm garters that the movie misses are hitting bulls-eyes with are covered with velvet or satin ribbon in bright colors like kelly green or cherry red, and usually have a little cockade of ribbons attached to the outer edge somewhere. They look so cute—and do so much to roll up a plain sweater—just by snapping over a pushed up sleeve or two. Some gals, like Ava Gardner, f’instance, even wear one (just one) on the pushed up sleeve of any simple

The biggest party in Hollywood history was given after the Award doings—at the hilltop home of the N. Peter Rathvons—he’s the head of R.K.O. Just about every top star, executive, director and writer in Hollywood was there for midnight supper and dancing that lasted until the sun came up. Under the festooned tent, decorated with thousands of blooms, stretched the longest buffet-table I’ve ever seen—and some really “festooned” femmes were all over the place. Everybody seemed to be happy and pleased with the way the Oscars went. Too bad Dana Andrews wasn’t there to hear how many people wished he too could have toted home a statuette for his wonderful work in “Best Years of Our Lives,” which took so many well-deserved honors that night. There was Dotty Lamour, in a white crepe dinner gown, very sarongish with a diagonal white drape—and Dotty was dripping with diamonds and ruby knick-knacks—like clips, bracelet, earrings and such. Bodice was simple and high at the neck ... Yvonne de Carlo (with Rory Calhoun that night—but do not switched to Bob Stack at this writing) was wearing a white satin gown that bustled out with a bustle where a bustle should be and draped on down to the floor. She wore lots of pearls—and her hair in a long, flowing bob. So did Jane Greer, who was very much with Peter Lawford for the occasion. Lana Turner was in white satin that night too—literally covered with bugle beads. Greer Garson was in plain black—very plain. But her hair, flaming in soft billows around her neck, should have given gals a big tip on how to look inviting—even if a lot of them didn’t get the hint.

Audrey Totter wore a very naked gown of bright blue—very much trimmed with sequins ... Luscious Lilli Palmer wore emerald green taffeta with a tremendously full skirt studded with gold sequins—and no jewelry of any kind. She had one of those new tight-around-the-shoulders short capes of sable around her most of the evening—so couldn’t see much of the dress top. These little fur capelets hook snuggly in front—the hooks being covered by a bunch of sable-tails—or the tails of the animal the cape happens to be made of—patch!

Olivia de Havilland, Hollywood’s newest “first lady,” wore a darling dress to Atwater Kent’s Red, White and Blue party. Very feminine it was—and strapless. It had a very low V neckline, and a design of garden flowers, hand-painted—which started with small buds on the tight bodice and became huge flowers as the design crept on down toward the floor-hemline. The soft multicolored flowers were highlighted here and there by occasional sequins and the entire gown was of sky-blue marquisette—with a very full skirt. Olivia wore a tiny string of pearls—and small pearl earrings.

Saw Donna Reed at this same party wearing a lovely pale pink taffeta gown, with its very full skirt beautifully draped to one side and caught with a huge bunch of much deeper pink silk roses. An added fillip was a cobwebby veil of black lace covering her lightish hair and falling across her bare shoulders. One simple diamond bracelet was her only piece of jewelry ... But then, Donna likes simplicity. She’s crazy about slip-on jersey sweater tops with short cap sleeves and almost turtle neck lines. She has them in all bright colors—and wears them over black, brown or white skirts. One reason she likes them is because they show off a wonderful large gold medallion, with its platinum insignia in the center, that she wears on a gold snake-chain. The medallion was bestowed on Donna for one special phase of work she did during the war.

When you take a quick leap out of town, like to Arrowhead Springs for a weekend, you sometimes see a good-looking daytime dress that is just as smart for cocktail time as it is for play-time. Like the one we spotted on Jo Stafford, breaking in some sun there. It was of black linen—and so cool and crisp looking. It had a sunburst-flared skirt, accented by Kelly-green braid stripes toward the hem. The bare-shoulder bodice was edged in the green braid—and so was the matching black linen short bolero jacket which she can wear any time a too-chilly breeze blows up. Day or evening for this tricky, and so wearable costume. Green play pumps or black sandals and gloves are the perfect accessories for it—depending on how long you expect to keep the outfit on.

Barbara Stanwyck really goes to town in a dreamy evening gown designed by Edith Head. It's a harem-type dress of black crepe with gold beading. Strapless, it has a separate bolero that may be removed to show the low square-cut bodice. The slinky skirt has a deep slit. Barbara wears jewel-studded hairpins in her child- The End

Summer Performance

1. Your Lilly White Body. If you sunburn easily and unattractively, don’t avoid the beach. Wear a sun hat or keep shaded under a beach umbrella. But even if you do burn to a crisp, Virginia advises a few minutes of sunrays because they do untold good to your skin.

2. Your Lovely Looks. In the summer, Virginia thinks your hair shows to best advantage and should look its best. A shampoo and a good massage of the scalp afterward is an ironclad promise of beautiful locks. And if your hair is dry and brittle try these Mayo tricks: Brush it more than you do in the winter; keep it trimmed to avoid split ends; and when you drive in an open roadster, tie it up in a pretty scarf. Another good hot-weather hair idea is to avoid hair dryers—after it’s set, let it dry of its own accord. But the biggest Mayo hair rule of all is this: In the summer, wear it simple! Tie yours with a gay ribbon, braid or let it float at will.

3. Your Sparkling Eyes. Virginia warns to watch out for those squint-wrinkles—wear sun-glasses! But don’t wear them so much that you get a white goggle-mark around each eye. And a “must” for sun-glasses is—buy a more expensive pair with ground lenses; cheap glasses can be ruinous to your vision.

And behind the scenes, take good care of your eyes. An eye lotion is soothing and beautifying after the strain of a hot and dusty day. Virginia soaks two bits of cotton in witch hazel and puts them on her closed eyes for a few minutes before she dresses for her evening date. She swears they’ll improve your dances and glances—and romancing.

4. Your Fortune-Making Face. A vital matter, your face—for you don’t want it turned to the world with make-up drooling down it in rivulets. No, you want your face to look effortlessly cool and lovely. Virginia washes her face with soap and water twice a day, and follows this instantly with rinsings of ice water and plenty of cold cream.

5. Your Revealing Hands. Once Virginia met one of those perennial bachelors at a party who prided himself on judging women’s ages accurately. (That explains why he was a perpetual bachelor!) But what amazed Virginia was that he actually guessed right—by looking at their hands, not their faces. It convinced her that a smart girl should look after her hands with ferocious interest. She always wears gloves while gardening—but before she puts them on, she rubs soft soap under her nails and around her cuticle. Then when she removes the gloves, she can also remove the grime around her nails in a quick session with the faucet. Also, she roots for a cream massage once a day and hand-lotion after every hand washing.

6. Your Revealed Figure. Virginia claims that in the summer, your real figure comes into the spotlight whether you like it or not—no more hiding the public in concealing skirts and muffling coats. Your legs and waistline are on stage center. And they’d better be good! Virginia’s solution is vigorous and figureful. She believes in health first; which means exercise at all swimming, riding, tennis, hand-ball, or walking. Second, she believes in a slim diet. Salads, cool fruit drinks, vegetables and fruit should be the rule. Skip between-meal snacks, but drink lots of liquid. That’s how Virginia keeps that famous Mayo figure come summertime.

7. Your Pretty Clothes. Virginia’s rule for clothes is simple. Fancy hats, heavy silk “slink” dresses and suits are out. Dress... cool in gay, crisp cottons and shantungs—both in daylight and moonlight.
That's the Mayo formula for a heavy summer. Comprehensive though it is, I'd like to add a few additional hints.

The most delicate skins can be safely sun-burned if done by degrees. It means careful timing—starting with ten or fifteen minutes a day and, daily increasing the length of time. And, of course, encouraging a tan with a good sun-tan lotion.

Once you've achieved that wonderful nut-brown skin, don't slack on the sun lotion. It helps to keep the skin from peeling and flaking. Also, make sure you rinse off all traces of salt water after an ocean dip—it's quietly drying your skin every minute it's there! What's more, if your tan seems to have bloomed up a lot of the natural oil in your skin, try a baby oil rubdown before your shower.

Now for summer perfumes. By all means wear them—but keep 'em light! And no heavy mystery-odors for the humid months. Wear flower scents or light cologne.

While Virginia emphasized care of the hands, let me come down hard on the feet! Nothing is uglier than a luscious morsel of femininity whose feet look as if they came along by mistake. Your feet should be immaculately clean and as carefully manicured as your fingernails. To rest swollen, tired feet after a hot day, I recommend rubbing them with cologne.

While you're sunning, watch your swimsuit straps! Nothing is sadder than a lovely girl in a floating dress at the Saturday dance—with her back looking as if she were wearing a cattle-brand!

As for exercise, I'll go further than Virginia: I say, set yourself a schedule and stick to it—say, ten laps across the pool, or three times to the float and back.

And Virginia was too polite to bring up a few vulgar necessities, but I'm not! (After all, I'm here to help us all be the glamorous gals we want to be.) So here goes on a couple of honest reminders for the summer: First, get rid of any ugly fuzz on your arms and legs and keep rid of it all summer long. Second, use deodorants every time you change costumes. Nothing ruins fragile summer fabrics like under-arm perspiration—to say nothing of fragile summer romances!

As for clothes, I agree wholeheartedly with Virginia. Keep 'em light, crisp-clean, and simple—and gaily colored. Snowy white, green, turquoise, yellow, pearl gray, tones of brown, and pink are all wonderful colors for you and for summer.

But if you follow all the foregoing advice, it'll be a wonderful summer for you all around!

THE END
The G. E. T. Girl

...To show, with her mother, Belle Taylor Tierney, for furnishings for her New York apartment. Belle Tierney, incidentally, is elegant and graceful enough to be accepted at her face value in the New York offices of Twentieth Century-Fox where she holds down an important job, and never to be described solely as Gene Tierney’s mother.

...To double date old beaus with her sister Pat. Gene and Pat fought all the time when they were younger. "But we both fell in love," Gene says, grinning at Pat, so attractive she might very well consider a career of her own, prefers to be Gene’s secretary. She says, "I wouldn’t work for anybody but my sister!"

...To weekend up in Green Farms, Connecticut, with her brother “Butch,” christened Howard, his wife, the former Jane Hewitt of Boston, and their younger, Michele, Michele is one month older than Gene’s three-year-old Daria. It was on Butch’s arm, incidentally, that Gene attended the gala New York premiere of "The Razor’s Edge."

On this occasion Belle Tierney, laughing at herself, says: "When I saw Gene and Howard Jr. coming down the theater aisle together, and all heads turned in their direction—the quite a change—"We got suddenly emotional. Like an idiot I wanted to stand up and say 'They’re mine,'"

Gene and Butch always have been quite a pair.

"If I never have a grain of fun again," Gene told me, "I had my share that summer I was sixteen, touring Europe with Butch and two other friends from Yale. I’d been at school in Switzerland. Then I’d gone to Paris where I got my first permanent wave and my first really grown-up Paris suit. The boys arrived, in a new Ford which they somehow had managed to look utterly disreputable—and wearing Tyrolean shorts, open shirts and beards! Elegantly, I refused to budge until they had shaved and shaved. At least, "We scrimped in some places—where we had tips about good inexpensive pensions—so we could splurge in other places."

You have only to listen to Gene talk of her brother to know what it will mean to her to have Daria and her nurse in Connecticut with the Howard Tierneys when she is in California working on a picture. "I see practically nothing of Daria when I’m in the film industry,” she said, a bit on Sundays, that’s all. I leave for the studio before she is awake and return after she is asleep. I’m fortunate in having a wonderful nurse. But with Daria under the same roof with my brother and his wife, and where my mother can look in every day or two, I will feel doubly secure.

Also, I think, Daria will have a greater sense of security surrounded by her own people and feeling loved always. And a sense of security is any child’s first need."

The place at Green Farms, built as a carriage-house and stable, was the Tierney’s first home in the big house on the estate. But during the depression they sold all but a few acres and converted the garage into a home. Whenever one of the children came home from school a room or a small wing would be added. The room built for Gene when she returned from Switzerland is hers today, with the original iron initials “G(eene) E(liza) T(ierney) still on the door. And

Many Never Suspect Cause of Backaches

This Old Treatment Often Brings Happy Relief

Many sufferers relieve nagging backache quickly, once it is discovered that the real cause of their trouble may be tired kidneys.

The kidney is Nature's chief way of taking the excess acids and waste out of the blood. They help most people pass about 6 pounds a day.

What kidney permits poisonous matter to remain in your body, it may cause nagging backache or rheumatism, loss of pep and energy, getting up nights, swelling, puffiness under the eyes, headaches and dizziness. Frequent urination may be used to help someone some times shows there is something wrong with your kidneys or bladder.

Don't wait! Ask your druggist for Don's Pills, a stimulant diuretic, used successfully by millions for over 50 years. Don's Pills have relief and will help the 16 miles of kidney tubing flush out poisonous waste from your blood. Get Don's Pills.
now Gene has added a kitchen to the wing Daria and her nurse will occupy. So they will have their own complete quarters. Quite an individual, interesting and charming place, the Tierney homestead.

"Never forget Gene's initials spell GET," Belle Tierney advises, amused. "She's slow getting started but she does get there. She never was a brilliant scholar at school. But at the end of a semester she always had managed to master her lessons so thoroughly that she excelled in her exams.

"It was the same in Switzerland. The girls at the school were asked to speak only in French—however limited their conversation had to be. Most of them, of course, talked fluently in English any time the teachers were out of earshot. But not Gene. She followed the rule to the letter. Her French today, consequently, it's splendid.

"I've watched the same pattern work out in her picture career. Pat and I suffered the first time we saw her on the screen. But she's applied herself and become so absorbed in her work that I will be surprised if she doesn't contribute a really fine performance—and soon."

"I wish," Gene says, also speaking of her career, "that I could play a pathetic part—a character not quite bright, perhaps. I feel I could bring it poignance. Maybe some day..."

I SAW Gene in California immediately after her divorce was granted and again in New York. In New York she had taken time out from decorating her apartment to sit for Elsie Earle, a niece of Somerset Maugham, and a pastel artist of note. The portrait of Gene was to be hung in London—together with a portrait Mrs. Earle had done of the Queen—at an exhibition for the benefit of delinquent children.

Gene was wearing a brown chambray skirt and a black bra. She had taken off her jacket because the neck-line interfered with the lines of the portrait. Her shoulders, arms, like her face, were suntanned and gleaming with good health.

"It's all that milk you drink—as well as the California sun," her mother exclaimed, laughing, "Just a New England country girl!"

There was good talk that morning... talk of Somerset Maugham "who is really very kind even though he does say scathing things sometimes."... talk of Gene's apartment, which she hoped we were interested in because she loves to describe it.

"The living-room walls," she specified, "are to be that wonderful color of cocoa with lots of milk in it—a pinkish brown.

be done in a quilted chintz, all soft muted colors, with dark green birds that have a bit of coral in their plumage. And with the sofa in that coral, in a rough fabric.

Someone—who assumed that of course I had a very maskred home—was going to treat the windows to frame the view advantageously.” She laughed with genuine mirth. “You should see my view. Very cosmopolitan, it is—fire-escapes with pots, pans and clothes-lines. And you should see my living room. Like the Black Hole of Calcutta. Fortunately, Pat and I do most of our entertaining in the evening when the curtains—cocoa damask to match the walls—will be drawn across.

“The dining room has old Eighteenth Century furniture, a scenic wallpaper of flowers and birds, quite feathery, and done in white and gray and dusty blues.

“The bedroom Pat and I will share has wallpaper with bunches of violets. So romantic, I think! And two low chairs upholstered in a chintz of the same pattern. With this, of course, the size of the window will hang all the windows and skirt our dressing table—which is seven feet long and will have two benches. Pat will have her end with her patchwork and dreams. And I will have my end with mine. So we won’t get into each other’s hair looking over each other’s shoulders.”

“... When she came to Daria’s room her eyes and voice softened unmistakably. ‘It’s the loveliest room of all, I think. The paper has little old-fashioned bouquets of pink and blue flowers. She’s such a sensitive, sentimental child. Her rug is bordered. And how little bed is to have a ruffled white organdy spread that looks as if we were about to pick its skirts and dance away...’

At this point Elsie Earle held up the portrait for inspection.

Nifty” is one of her favorite words. But her beautifying-cabinet, its her own.

“I wish I knew,” she said, returning to the model’s chair, “why such a fuss has been made over my decision to live in New York.

“With the speedy air service we have today there’s no reason why a film player shouldn’t live anywhere in the country. I can be in Hollywood nine hours after the studio calls by.

“Besides, I think it’s a good thing for actors and actresses to get away between pictures. It refreshes the viewpoint!”

I agree with Gene. No longer is there any need for movies or movie people to be so insular about that reclamed strip of desert land which holds Hollywood, Beverly Hills, Holmby Hills, The Valley, Culver City, Santa Monica and Malibu.

I applaud the fact that exterior shots, more and more, are being filmed against their actual locale, and not against a bit of Canada or Florida that has been erected on the studio’s back lot. It makes sense to me that films like ‘Carnegie Hall’ and ‘Portrait of Jenny’ should be filmed in New York where the stories take place.

As for the stars; for some time now, between pictures, they’ve been moving to between pictures, they’ve been moving to homes they’ve established in various places throughout the United States. Paulette Goddard and Burgess Meredith maintain an apartment in California, but think of a New York State farm as home. Claude Rains has his fine farm in Chester County, Pennsylvania. Bette Davis has long trekked to her “Butternut” in New Hampshire.

Then to California—where the tours players struck down roots beyond the Sierras Nevada. Gene’s change in living caused comment, I think, because it was spotlighted by her divorce from Cassini. That was a big blow to her big twelve-room house and her yacht “The Barbil.”

The boat always was a useless extra-

Three Wishes Had Esther
(Continued from page 56) "Who's doing it for you?" Don wanted to know. "I am," replied the swimming star. "How quaint!" quoth Loper. "That's what I want it to be," said Esther still smiling. "But darling," drawled Don, "it isn't chic to be quaint!" But "chic" is a word that Esther reserves for her work and for her public appearances, not for her home.

But don't get the wrong idea. It's a little gem, due to our work—and love—put into it by Esther and Ben.

We had another helping of pea soup and then Esther, the champion swimmer of Hollywood, shows me what is probably the smallest and least pretentious pool in Hollywood. In fact it's little more than a plunge—but don't tell Esther I said so because she's very proud of it. And so would you be if you had painted the bottom turquoise blue, and the fair hands! "The filter system," says Esther with pride, "was put in by Ben."

She shows me the cute dressing room alongside the pool. It was sealed off, and we bought it for ten dollars. The wash basin, etc., we picked up in a junk shop for five dollars.

"You know something?" continues the all-American home girl. "Before I married Ben, I had an offer of marriage from a man who had the most perfect home—everything complete, down to the last wash cloth in the marvelous bathrooms. I couldn't have married him even if I hadn't been so much in love with Ben, because I couldn't be a fixture in a house. I'd want to do the housework!"

I keep looking around for a maid to clear away the dishes. I had assumed it was the cook's day off because of Esther's whipping up the meal herself. But she puts me wise to the incredible situation—for a star, I mean.

"We have no servants," says Esther, "except a cleaning woman who comes in two hours a day, five times a week. Why have a cook, when I can cook?" "But when you're making a rich beef stew it begins to look like a superior cook," I suggest. "When I'm working, I still do the cooking. You see when I'm exhausted after a long day in the studio, cooking relaxes me. And besides, I'd rather be alone with Ben in the house and not have someone in the kitchen."

"But who taught you to cook?" I want to know, relinquishing, for the sake of my figure, another helping of Esther's marvelous apple pie. "I didn't learn to cook from anybody," she says, "I sort of absorbed it from my mother."

And now we're really cooking with gas, in the business of understanding what makes Esther Williams tick.

She is the "family-est" girl I think I ever met in my life, with tremendous love and respect for her mother who is indeed a remarkable woman.

Esther has two sisters and a brother—another brother died when he was sixteen. And the sisters and brother each have two children. And Esther does very cute things for a teen. Like, when Esther bought herself a smart pinata, she had copies of it made for her nieces and they were there together at a Sunday barbecue dinner. "We have as many as forty friends and relatives for barbecue parties on Sundays," says Esther and Esther and Ben do the cooking!

"The one time we had the Brown Derby do the catering," she tells me, "was for my mother's birthday. Because I wanted my mother to be waited on. When we cooked ourselves, she's always jumping up to help."

When Ben's mother had a birthday party, Esther thoughtfully invited six ladies who were her friends.

And as for Esther and Ben’s friends: with the exception of June Allyson and Dick Powell, Janet Blair and the Sonny Tufts (Ben plays golf with Sonny) the names would be unfamiliar to you—make-up men from the studio, and radio technicians from Ben’s broadcasting station.

Incidentally, Ben has never made a broadcast since their marriage without Esther in the control room—except of course when she is working at Metro. Ben makes three broadcasts on Friday and two on Monday. But whether they are doing broadcasts or pictures, when Esther has to get up at five-thirty in the morning, they always have breakfast together, and Esther always cooks it.

“We are very lucky to have so much time together,” says Esther. “Some people don’t get as much in a whole lifetime as we’ve had already.”

She smiled. “All my life, ever since I can remember that is, I’ve had three wishes. To find my guy. To be a happily married woman. To have children. I didn’t want to be the President of the United States, or a Congresswoman. I didn’t even want to be a movie star!” And it is true that Louis B. Mayer had to do a heap of persuading to get Esther’s signature to a contract. “I didn’t think I had anything to offer them,” she explains.

But she is honest enough to admit that she likes the fame that goes with being a movie star. “And I don’t mind the autograph hunters. I only mind them when they intrude on what I call our strict privacy. At night clubs or premiers, I expect it. We’re on display and it’s part of the job. But I don’t like to ride in an armored car, I want to get some air. And when kids jump on the running board of our car I think that’s wrong.”

Even then, Esther has a tolerant attitude. There was one very persistent fan.

Everywhere that Esther and Ben went, they were sure to find this fan waiting for them and thrusting himself at them.

“This is the wrong way for you to live,” Esther told the surprised girl. “You’re wasting your life following me and other stars. I’ve got a better idea. You like movie stars, don’t you?” she asked. “All right,” said Esther, and she got her a job helping with the fan mail for another star at her studio.

I don’t know any other movie actress in Hollywood who would have bothered.

But then Esther is smarter than most actresses. You’d think she had a Wall Street background, the way she invests her money. “It’s all very solid,” says Esther with satisfaction. There’s an annuity for her mother and some of their money is invested in gilt-edged stocks.

“And,” continues Esther, “we have some property in the Palisades district, and we’re building a unit apartment house there facing the ocean. And we have some land in Acapulco in Mexico, and we’ll build a house. And we have some land, not far from here. And when this house gets too small for us, we’ll build ourselves a new house there.”

After the loss of her expected baby, Esther and her husband wanted to have another one right away. “But,” she tells me, “if that happened, then I couldn’t work for Metro for more than a year. And that wouldn’t be fair. They were very good to me when I was expecting the baby during shooting of ‘This Time for Keeps.’ Joe Pasternak and Dick Thorpe did all they could to keep me well, and when I went off to rest, M-G-M paid me a nice bonus. So I’ll do one or two more pictures now, and then I will take time off for a family.”

When people sympathize with Esther about the baby, she replies: “When the merry-go-round throws you off, I believe in getting back on.”

"No," he said. "My father's a druggist in Long Beach."

"But your other relatives—there must have been artistes among them?"

"The only one I know is my Uncle Charlie. He was a street car conductor at La Jolla, I always used to say he was the only one of us who knew where he was going!"

To her other questions, Peck gave answers as honest. Then he waited for the interview to approach. There was no shadow of his father, or of Uncle Charlie. The interviewer wasn't going to have her idealization spoiled—not even by its object. Peck was not aggrieved. "I'm grateful when they write them about me. I'm pleased when nice things are said," he stated. "But I don't get mad when they pan me. Writing's a writer's business—acting is mine.

Stretched out in a comfortable chair in the living room of his attractive, unpretentious home, Gregory Peck discussed the printed aspect of a star's life. A misted view of daffodil-descending, rolling hills, could be glimpsed through the wide bay window. Sounds of supper in preparation came from the kitchen and the nurse had just passed through the room, carrying the blue-blanketed baby in his young son, Stephen. Jonathan, aged two and a bit, played nearby.

"It was hard to learn," Gregory Peck went on, "that our private life was a public concern. That took time to understand.

At this moment, young Jonathan spilled a large box of big wooden matches all over the floor. Gregory Peck just said: "Whoa, there, Johnny!" His son knelt down and began gathering up the matches and putting them back in the box.

"Greta, you know," Johnny's father said, "claims she learned about Johnny through reading the papers. She'd be to see the doctor once and it was still just one of those maybes. Then, there it was in print—we were infanticiding.

"Greta was slightly chagrined. She had wanted it to be a secret for a while anyway—as it could have been in San Diego or Podunk; anywhere but here in the goldfish bowl district.

"Professional problems on this score came later. To whom would I give the news scoop when the baby arrived?" Here Peck's craggy features broke into a broad grin. "If you let one magazine take first picture, they're going to grab your neck in a noose with the other magazines. There's only one baby at a time—and a lot of magazines.

News stories have cast Peck in about 20 roles this year. He no longer rushes to a phone to call his agent when he reads such stories. Signing a contract is the only proof that he's going into a new film."

"I got into this business," he said, "from a non-theatrical background. I'm crazy about it but there are 139,000,000 people who aren't in it. I'd like to remain part of that group, too. I don't want to be an object of burlesque and then pull in the gates. It'll be too hard to open them. In Hollywood, when you talk, it's shop-talk. When you eat, it's with people who're in the same business. You can get lost.

"The one chance you have is to leave town. I grab this chance because I need the change of perspective that being with businessmen, architects, farmers, doctors—non-theatrical people—gives me.

"I love the place. I love the people. I'm not ungrateful, and never want to be, to Hollywood. But sometimes from the outside, you appreciate it more."

Greg Peck loves his work and, while he says he comes close to being the world's busiest man, his three months' layoff before he went into Alfred Hitchcock's "The Paradine Case," gave him the jitters.

He's enthusiastic about two of his recent released pictures; "The Yearling" and "Duel in the Sun" which raved about Peck's performance in "The Yearling," But Greg was concerned only with the appraisal of the work done by Jane Wyman and Robert Mitchum in "Duel in the Sun.

"Jane did a swell job of a wonderful job," he said. "And the boy—the boy's a natural actor. And you know how rare they are.

"The Yearling" left one other real memory. That, he remarked, scratching himself abstractedly, was the memory of Florida's fiercely ravenous red bugs. The crew was located in Florida for seven weeks and the red bugs were located on the crew for the same length of time.

"Never scratched so much in my life," Peck laughed. "We tried all the remedies but pretty much agreed with the natives. Those red bugs bite much harder. They've had enough—and not before. They're even worse than the snakes I met up with there."

"Duel in the Sun" gives Peck a chance to play a villain, the dominating brute. "I liked being a full-blown fat," he said. "A fine change in roles. But I don't know how one part of the public is going to take it. Ever since 'Keys of the Kingdom,' sweet old ladies have stopped me and said: "The expression in your eyes was so real—you must have just lived the part." I wonder if they'll think about this picture?"

THE Father Chisholm role did one thing for Peck for which he is thankful. It gave even publicity photographers the idea that they couldn't ask him to pose for some of the usual pictures.

"No longer..." he says, "Is that so? I'm serious and smiling."

However, pictures must be taken and Peck doesn't mind making a request. He must have done every possible pose, in the past three years. The other day a photographer came up with a new idea—a double exposure trick with me doing two expressions at once.

"I do have a couple of other expressions. I can look puzzled and often do. And then there's the far-off looking—into the future expression. One of my best. It ought to be, I'll admit, but it's not an easy one to photograph. When I used to pose for the Montgomery-Ward Catalogue. Got a lot of useful experience out of those posing jobs," Peck added. "And there were many more. And I worked eight hours a day, as hard as I ever worked. When I'd get to the photographer's studio, there would be a row of clothes a block long waiting for me. A talk of a day with the suit was, as they say, "It's a piece of cake.""

"I think I'll change to candid shots. I can do that with the ever-ready camera."

At this moment, the nurse came rushing through the room again, with a crying Stephen in her arms. Gregory Peck looked up and said: "Thank goodness she's a week-change artist, too!"

The End.
Hollywood vs. the Fan Club
(Continued from page 33) were concerned deeply concerned—about the fact that although Mrs. Roufs says the average age of the presidents is twenty-six and some of them are grandfathers, still there are many who are minors.

The producers also were agreed that Mrs. Roufs had no right to commit the studios to visits from hundreds of people without consulting them first. They called attention to the old and necessarily rigid rule against such mass visits. Large crowds on sound stages stop expensive productions.

And that wasn't all! The Screen Actors Guild and the Co-ordinating Committee, which have jurisdiction over all stars, especially non-star participation in such dances and social affairs as Mrs. Roufs planned. The statement of the Guild concerning the convention said: "It is diatymic which could explode and result in nationwide unfavorable publicity, seriously hurting Hollywood in general and the actors in particular. All stars asked to participate are asked to note the Guild's disapproval of this affair."

In rebuttal, Ms. Roufs said, "They never gave me a chance to explain. I did not want to swap the studios with visitors. I meant to take the club presidents through the plant and let them get to know. I have always found that the back lots are very interesting. We had no intention of going on sound stages.

"And we never promised that any stars would be at our invitations. We just hoped they would. But dozens of stars told us they would like to attend."

Arch Reeve, of the public information committee of the Association of Motion Picture Producers, and Joe Alvin, of the public information committee of the Society of Independent Motion Picture Producers, undertook a thorough study of plans for the convention. They reported that the invitation to club members promised three days of visits to the studios. They said it was regretted that a few of the invitations were shown to them before they were mailed to the members.

However, in this general disavowal of the convention, these organizations representing the studios were careful not to disavow the fan clubs themselves. They said, "We are of the opinion that the matter, as described, would prove extremely embarrassing to fan club delegates who might accept." The studios have never made any attempt to assess the value of fan clubs but generally, of the innumerable thousands of dollars every year servicing fans.

Also, most stars not only welcome these clubs but cooperate with them. Take some stars at random: Betty Davis, Ann Sheridan, Shirley Temple, Joan Crawford. They pay great attention in trying to answer the intelligent letters in their fan mail.

And studios and management understand that the members of these clubs are, generally speaking, reliable individuals who have nothing in common with the handful of extroverts who gang up on stars in public places.

Actually the clubs constitute a great deal more than mere admiration societies. They are hobbies created and largely personally financed by individuals, women mostly, who enjoy being amateur editors and publishers. For usually the publication of a bulletin or journal three or four times a year is a club's chief activity. And since dues never are more than one dollar and sometimes are as low as twenty-five cents.

cents the originator of a club invariably has to pay some of the costs out of his own pocket.
Scrupulous fan clubs make it a point not to ask stars to contribute money. There are stars, however, who do give typewriters or mimeographing machines or contribute the paper for an occasional edition.
Always a star writes a letter for each issue and sends snapshots which are pasted into the journals after they have been mimeographed, in various shapes and sizes, labor of love by the club presidents. Printing, of course, would be much too expensive.

The largest known fan club, incidentally, is that of James Mason. It has five thousand members, here and in England. Gene Autry's club has twenty-five hundred members. So does Roy Rogers' June Allyson's club has nineteen hundred members. The John Ridgely Club—John has never starred in a picture—boasts eight hundred members, mostly in England. And Frank Sinatra has more than a thousand ardent club members, all fervently led by his pre-age, George Evans of New York.

Some of these clubs engage in charitable activities. Jean Pierre Aumont's Club, according to Mrs. Ellen E. Rous, is supporting a French orphan. Jeanette MacDonald's Club is sending a young man to singing school. Gene Autry's Club recently engaged in a campaign to send coal to England, each member being asked to package five or ten pounds of coal and ship it to their English representative in an effort to keep their British fans warm.

THERE have been rackets in this field. Unscrupulous persons have collected money from fans in return for which the fans have received nothing. These rackets, however, are petty and infrequent.

It very definitely is not because either the studios or stars feel that the fans who would attend the convention are irresponsible or in no way worthy of respect that they refuse to give Mrs. Rous's idea their support.

It is the idea itself and the hazards it presents to which they object.

Mrs. Rous, however, has not been daunted by her Hollywood opposition. On April 15 she called in her attorney and incorporated the 21-year old International Fan Club, with three directors, Mrs. Rous, Gladys Perkins and Phoebe Parsons Wilhelm who are her employees. At that time she announced she would go ahead with the convention.

"We can hold our convention without the studios, and we will," she said, "I expect 189 club presidents, including one from Honolulu and one from Scotland. Possibly there will be a hundred or so more from California—not more than 300 all told.

"I expect that the stars will invite the club presidents to their homes. And they may invite them to the studios as their special guests."

There you have the story. All the hullabaloo, bitterness and national publicity, misunderstood, of course, by many fans, started with an Los Angeles mimeographing office. Mrs. Rous thought she had a wonderful idea and that it would be applauded.

Hollywood thought otherwise. Hollywood in fact, wants no part of it. Hollywood says that without skilful supervision, elaborate planning, and precise timing the stars and studios could not possibly participate. As the Screen Actors Guild says, it would be "dynamite."

And Hollywood is right.
Fabulous Fairbanks

(Continued from page 105) Doug wished then that the wall was conveniently hung with vines for a foothold, as the screen prop men would most certainly have done for him. But there wasn't any make-believe about this one. He led the way back to the front. The men battered down the door and took their prisoners.

Doug's big dream while he was in the service was first, to rest and spend a lot of time with his wife and two daughters and second, to return to Hollywood as a producer. He wants to be responsible for everything that goes into one of his pictures. When he took off the colorful Sinbad costumes he moved over to a quiet little bungalow at Universal-International and hung out a stall, business-like shingle which reads: The Fairbanks Company.

There in workman-like fashion he delves into the problems of story, location, cost, direction, and cast for his two planned productions, "The Exile" and "Perry and the Pirates." There's no glamour about the office. At his desk, Doug usually works in a pair of slacks, a sport shirt open at the throat with a neckerchief tucked under for a tie.

His hard-working secretary is a former WAC who served in the Mediterranean war theater. To both of them film-making is a "job."

How about that home life Doug wanted to get back to? He manages that very nicely. Like any other good busy executive Doug spends as many hours during the day as necessary to complete his work. After that he belongs to his family.

Socially, the Fairbanks are definitely not Hollywood. Their big, beautiful home, Westridge, in Pacific Palisades, covers ten acres high up in the hills. From one side of his home Doug can look out over the ocean and from the opposite windows he can see the wide, timber-covered Will Rogers ranch. His closest friend, David Niven, is also his nearest neighbor and Doug is godfather to David's youngest child.

But Westridge is more or less an international gathering place for leaders in all phases of world activities. When Lord Louis Mountbatten visited this country he stayed with Doug. And Virginia-born Mary Lee entertained for him at a huge ball—Southern style. Now Westridge is taking its place as the high social activity hub just as Pickfair used to when Doug Sr. and Mary Pickford reigned in Hollywood.

Time was of course when Doug Jr. was a gay-living son of moviedom. Maybe world conditions changed him. Maybe his own activities on behalf of the State Department and his Navy career steadied him. But for a good share of the change credit, quiet, non-professional Mary Lee.

There is one characteristic that everybody in filmdom mentions when they speak of Fairbanks, Junior or Senior. And that is the tradition of loyalty the Fairbanks have always shown. Somewhere, somehow, in every picture that each has made, there has been a job for most everyone with whom Doug Sr. worked on his first picture in 1915.

Charlie Stevens (Chief Eagle Eye) has appeared in every Fairbanks picture. In many cases he and others have been "written in" in spite of the script.

The gag around Hollywood is that Doug has to keep busy because so many people depend on him. But he loves it. And as he keeps jumping from one job to another now, his favorite quip is, "Did you hear what one moth said to another? It's great to be back in civilian clothes."

And it's great to have him back!

More people are smoking CAMELST today than ever before in history!

Yes, experience during the shortage taught millions the differences in cigarette quality!

DIVING Champion Mildred O'Donnell hasn’t forgotten the war shortage of cigarettes. "I never realized there were such differences in cigarettes until the shortage," she recalls. "That’s when I really learned what cigarette suits me best—Camel."

Millions of others had the same experience, with the result that today more Camels are being smoked than ever before in history. But, no matter how great the demand:

We don’t tamper with Camel quality. Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS than any other cigarette

Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors—in every branch of medicine—to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.

WHY I DO NOT CHARGE 60¢ for my nail polish

Even though it is the only nail polish in the world containing the miracle, chip-proofing ingredient... PLASTEEN

A year ago I faced a serious decision!

I was ready to introduce the first nail polish to bear my own name. Everything was arranged except one thing... the price I would charge for it.

It was in a beautiful pyramid bottle. The shades were up to the minute in fashion. The brush was of superfine quality. And, in addition... the polish contained an amazing ingredient found in no other nail polish at any price... the miracle discovery of my cosmetic chemists... PLASTEEN.

PLASTEEN was the answer to every woman's greatest nail-do problem—chipping. PLASTEEN not only helps to shockproof nails against chipping but also makes my polish go on easier, quicker, without "bubbles," and adds a new, starlike brilliance.

This Was the Problem I Faced

Most every woman in the U. S. pays either 10 cents or sixty cents for her nail polish.
Which price should I charge?
On the one hand, I felt that, if ever there was a nail polish worth sixty cents, it was mine... particularly on account of PLASTEEN.

At sixty cents my profits would be tremendous. At 10 cents they would merely be modest.

BUT... I also knew that if I charged sixty cents, my market... and the benefits of PLASTEEN... would be limited to comparatively few women who could afford that price. If I charged 10 cents, millions of women could afford it and PLASTEEN would be available to all.

I made my decision... 10 CENTS was the price.

Helen Neushaefer nail polish, I sincerely believe, is the greatest value ever offered in this country. Won't you try it and write me about it?

It is now available in 12 gorgeous shades... each containing PLASTEEN... at chain and drug store cosmetic counters everywhere.

Sincerely,

Helen Neushaefer

Published in this space every month.

The greatest star of the screen!

We love “Fiesta.” We recommend “Fiesta,” “Fiesta” is the most-a of the best-a. And so is Esth-a!

We refer, of course, to lovely Esther Williams, who lends her glamorous presence to M-G-M’s big Technicolor spectacle, “Fiesta.”

Even standing still, Esther is lovely to look at. And when she swirls a matador’s cape in the bull ring, or dances a flaming Latin flamenco, or romances under the mellow Mexican moon—ah-ah-ah!

You’ll revel in gay “Fiesta” and meet, for the very first time, handsome newcomer Ricardo Montalban, the M-G-M star discovery whose torrid love makes the screen curl up at the edges.

Ricardo’s equally adept at dancing and at the strings of a guitar... equally audacious in the bull ring and in the moonlight. Welcome. Good Neighbor!

The beauty of Esther Williams... the manliness of Montalban... the music of Mexico... the magic of Technicolor... the thrills of the arena—that’s M-G-M’s “Fiesta.”

Vival we say for Director Richard Thorpe, Producer Jack Cummings and a prime supporting cast: Akim Tamiroff, John Carroll, Cyd Charisse, Mary Astor, Fortunio Bonanova. Also for screen playmen George Bruce and Lester Cole.

“Fiesta” leads off a festival of M-G-M hits. Soon “The Hucksters” comes to town, with Clark Gable (as Vic Norman) and lovely Deborah Kerr (pronounced “new star”). Wait till you see Frederick Wakeman’s bombshell best-seller. You’ll be saying “Love that picture!”

Coming along, too, is “Song of Love,” starring Katharine Hepburn. Paul Henreid and Robert Walker. We’ll say only one thing about it: “Song of Love” is one of the ten greatest love stories of all time.

Meantime, be a guest-a at “Fiesta”

A reliable guide to recent pictures. One check means good; two checks, very good; three checks, outstanding

Dear Ruth (Paramount)

Little girls can do lots of things that send their elders right into hysteric. Miriam Wilkins did just that in "Dear Ruth" for a couple of years on Broadway; now Mona Freeman takes her over on the screen and turns her out to teenster perfection in a picture that runs along on clever lines, festive comedy and the good acting of Edward Arnold.

"Dear Ruth" is the way the letters from overseas started; they were written by William Holden to Ruth Wilkins, a very pretty and not at all adolescent Joan Caulfield. The catch is little sister Miriam. In the midst of her draft-women project she's taken time off to write some letters to soldier Holden, enclosing sister Ruth's picture and some moonlight-and-roses touches. Everything would be fine except that the soldier shows up with "that overseas look in his eye." Take it from there and you have a picture that's going to lift your spirits right up into the category that's known as "blithe."

Players Arnold, Billy De Wolfe and little Mona Freeman carry things along so well you don't even mind when events get a little lugubriously out of hand towards the end. Caulfield and Holden make a nice straight-shooting team and everything is fast and funny.

Your Reviewer Says: Good play makes a good picture.

The Unfaithful (Warners)

A hard-hitting picture played with suspense, this is an expert treatment of a vital theme.

As Chris Hunter who had been married only a week when his husband was sent overseas for three years, Ann Sheridan gives an unforgettable portrayal. Bob (Zachary Scott) has been home a year when the picture opens and he and Chris are happily happy. There is nothing to warn Chris that the one indiscretion of a lonely woman is already threatening her happiness and that because of it she will be involved in a murder charge. But the truth cannot be hidden and in an unforgettable scene between husband and wife, Chris tries to explain her unfaithfulness.

Zachary Scott, as the husband, and Lew Ayres, as Larry Henning, the lawyer who handles her case, turn in mature, understanding performances.

The picture offers no excuse for women whose wartime loneliness betrayed their love but it does put the woman's problem squarely up to the audience.

Your Reviewer Says: A "must" for thoughtful movie-goers.

Miracle on 34th St. (20th Century-Fox)

This is really a miracle! Fox takes a pleasant little picture about the fabulous Macy's department store, adds Edmund Gwenn in the captivating role of Kris Kringle, pairs off Maureen O'Hara and John Payne, runs up some inspired dialogue, has everything moving fast and out comes one of the best pictures in many a movie month.

Get out your bag of cheers and get ready to go. You'll be beguiled by every bit of it—from Edmund Gwenn's magnificently acting as the little man who's real name is Kris Kringle to the great sport you'll have watching the merchandising business going for a merry ride. Not to mention the law and politics—they come in for their share of the fun with Gene Lockhart as the judge in a courtroom scene that has lawyer John Payne making his miraculous point with a chuckle.

Natalie Wood is a solemn-eyed little girl who manages to be both lovable and precocious, an accomplishment that puts her right up in the major league of little-girl actresses.

There's nothing for you to figure out—this miracle is just as logical and just as wonderful as Christmas. If you don't come out feeling that the world is a happy place you'd better start checking your sense of humor. There's no sticky Pollyanna business about this either—it's just everyone working together in a film that's worth working for.

Your Reviewer Says: A Twentieth Century miracle.

Possessed (Warner's)

THIS is scaled to adult size—a film showing the torturous and eventual breakdown of a woman. The theme is Joan Crawford, who makes a neurotic role convincing to a normal audience. Van Heflin is the opportunist who rejects her, thereby sending her into a loveless marriage with Raymond Massey. That's the plot; the picture is a morbid account of the approach of insanity.

Crawford has a hard task; she does it magnificently. Heflin has the demanding job of making himself both sympathetic and unsympathetic to the audience; he does it well. He is the materialist who wants what he wants at the expense of others; since he gives fair warning of his code, he must be excused from complete blame. Raymond Massey as the husband has an even role that calls forth none of his great talents but fits in beautifully in the general patchwork of contorted love and hate. Nana Bryant plays the young stepdaughter with finesse; but the credits go to Crawford and Heflin.

The picture is not entertainment but a psychological drama that may do the good work of bringing more neurotics to medical treatment before it is too late.

Your Reviewer Says: You'll be haunted.

The Bachelor and the Bobbysoxer (RKO)

RACE yourself for a slice of sheer mirth when you see this one. What, no message, no problem, no world dilemma? Nary a one. Even the growing pains of this story of adolescence are painless.

Cary Grant, artist and man-about-town, finds himself facing charges in the court of Judge Myrna Loy, for disturbing the night club peace and inspiring violent emotions in her teenage sister, Shirley Temple. On the pretext of being a model, Shirley wangles her way into his apartment. Some hours later the startled Grant finds her there just as her terrified sister, supported by the forces of law and order, bangs on the door.

Matters become hilarious as the hapless and helpless Cary struggles with his flaming juniors, the while his eyes appraise the uncharmed charms of lady judges.

Shirley is strictly in her Temple stride. Miss Loy might have allowed Her Honor to unbend a little more but even so she gives her a lot of the Loy appeal. As Shirley's calf-eyed swain, Johnny Sands is likely to stir up activity on the bobby-sox front. Ray Collins and Rudy Vallee are both good. But it is Cary Grant, with his magnificent sense of comedy, who keeps the whoops of laughter rolling.

Hit Parade of 1947 (Republic)

THE headlines are Joan Edwards, Eddie Albert, Constance Moore and Gil Lamb; the joy of a matinee picture is just what you'd expect. A foursome starts out in the entertaining business, discovers they have to forego loyalty for profit so they split up after a lot of movie heartbreak. In the midst of this the show keeps going on, with Joan singing, Eddie writing music, Gil clowning and Constance being a big Hollywood star.

Woody Herman and his orchestra swing in with some tunes and Roy Rogers plus Trigger has a guest spot. If you're enamoured of Joan Edward's singing and Gil Lamb's acts, you may like this way this rambles along.

Your Reviewer Says: Not too good, not too bad.

Green for Danger (Eagle-Lion)

IT takes Alastair Sim as Inspector Cockrill to straighten out this murderous mix-up. If you're as clever as he may guess the who-dunnit answer to this British film before the end; otherwise... Mrs. Muir—Gene Tierney—to you—has refused to be frightened away from his former home and has decided to take over Gold Cottage. What she hadn't bargained for was being taken over by a white-robed ghost and inveigled into writing a lusty book dictated by him just in the nick of time to save her family fortunes.

When a fragile English lady and an attractive male ghost get together like that, you have something in the way of entertainment. And when George Sanders comes in leering you really can enjoy yourself. He's the best rape around and you won't blame Gene for letting him pull all that would over her pretty.

It's all done up cleverly with some bright comedy touches. You'll like Rex Harrison and wish he weren't just a spirit; you'll love Mr. Sanders and you'll find Gene, Edna Best as the maid and Vanessa Brown as the daughter thoroughly right in their roles. The only catch is just how things can end up. After all, what can happen when a ghost and a lady fall in love? You're right, it does.

Your Reviewer Says: Different and diverting.

A Likely Story (RKO)

BOUT the unlikeliest story is this con-trived nonsense concerning Bill Williams and Barbara Hale, with Sam Levene perking around now and then. Bill is a veteran who thinks he's about to die; Barbara's a painter who thinks she's about to be a genius. They're both wrong, but before they find that out there's some fake-insurance-policy business, a few silly gangster scenes and confusion for the on-lookers. Barbara's a pretty miss who looks a lot like the grown-up Miss Temple. We can even see where an honest young man like Bill might want to sign over a few grand to her. They'd make a likely team for a likelier story. The warmth of their being man and wife in real life comes through on the screen.

Your Reviewer Says: Slightly unlikely.

Desert Fury (Paramount)

THIS fury turned into a slight case of madness on the part of whoever thought this cryptically told tale about a bunch of unpleasant people out in the desert could ever come under the heading of a good picture. You just won't like anyone—except maybe Burt Lancaster who has to be the good boy and he's so misplaced he merely becomes a comic "cooper." You can't believe Mary Astor could talk out of the side of her mouth as the lady boss of a desert town; or that daughter Elizabeth Scott could be so stupid as not to catch on to the dastardly doings of John Hodiak. Everything starts off with everybody talking in half-sentences, intimating that something very big is going on. When things finally come out in the open, you discover it's just a lot of silly ado about Mamie's spoiled daughter Elizabeth who's supposed to be a young finishing-school girl but looks more like a lady who could readily follow in her mother's sallow-keeping footsteps. She's just determined to have more honest Burt and hook up with Hodiak.

There are big tries at big heroics, but it all degenerates into a laughingstock with Mamie Scott succeeding only in being very odd in her big moments. Wendell Corey makes his gangster debut and talks through tight lips fairly convincingly, but he's much nicer when he unscrubs his face and looks like any pleasant young man.

Your Reviewer Says: No go.

The Patient Vanishes (Film Classics)

A FEW years ago James Mason played Mick Cardy, the detective hero of David Hume's mystery, in an English film. Seeing as how he now is a big name in the movie game, over comes this picture to show American audiences how he used to look. It's not much of a film—any detective that lets himself get caught up by the villains so many times has no right to catch the crooks in the end, but if you just can't do without Mason you may like watching his sleuthing activities.

The patient is a lord's daughter who vanishes from a rest home. There's a murderer and the police are called in, but Mason begets the punch by his private detecting which, as we've said, does seem to have a slightly clumsy touch. Mary Clare is a wicked wife to wicked Frederick Valk, but they just can't get anywhere with the unusual mystery of Mason and his secretary Margaret Vyner start stalking.

The thrills-and-chills touch flops completely.

Your Reviewer Says: Mason's younger days.

Moss Rose (20th Century-Fox)

MURDER, murder everywhere and Victor Mature lurking sinisterly in the background, looking tall, dark and enigmatic in his greatcoat. A moss rose and a Bible are around, too, whenever there's trouble, so naturally Inspector Vincent Price has a very evil plan on hand. He's a pale pretty finger of suspicion is pointed on cockney chorus girl Peggy Cummins to Victor Mature. But nobleman Mature's mother, Ethel Barrymore, has a few tricks up her sleeve and before she's through, you've had a pretty high old time watching things work out.

The plot and the people are fairly credible. Mature looks just a little too Latin to be even a half-blooded Englishman, even though he's spent most of his life in Canada and doesn't say or do too much to give him away. Peggy Cummins looks just too fresh and pretty to be the centerpiece of these moss rose murders.

The spooky old house makes for good atmosphere and Ethel Barrymore does the same by acting very strangely now and then. Margo Woode throws looks that kill; and there's thrill and chills—chills from those murders and thrills, of course, benefit of that handsome Mature.

Your Reviewer Says: Good enough.

Cynthia (M-G-M)

EVERYBODY and his kid brother will relish this family story about Cynthia Birchard and Elizabeth Taylor, acting with a glow that's unmistakable. Things get off to a rather slow start, but they start speeding up and before the end everyone is having a fine time at a family-portrait movie slightly reminiscent of the Andy Hardy winners.

James Lydon steps right out in front as the young sailor who's come home to throw aside his gun for some high-school books. His role is A-1; his performance the same. Scotty Beckett as Will Parker has a brief moment of glory that wins the big laugh rating of the film.

Don't take chances with your breath. Before any date use Listerine Antiseptic. It's a quick, easy, delightful precaution against simple, non-systemic cases of halitosis (unpleasant breath).

P. S. Your money buys less today, so spend it wisely. You must try the new Listerine Tooth Paste.
Around Town: The Betty Grable-Harry James baby which arrived ahead of schedule and will eventually answer to the name of Jessica, is said to be a beautiful little vest-pocket edition of its lovely mama ... The minute George Montgomery and Dinah Shore discovered they were really going to become parents, they telephoned all their friends and then sat down to plan for a new nursery ... Cal nominates for the cutest married couple in town Pat Nearney and Mona Freeman who are about to become parents. It's almost impossible to believe that Mona, who was so outstanding as Joan Caulfield's fresh-faced kid sister in "Dear Ruth," is a grown-up "matron" ... Orson Welles became so noisy in his loud monologues to his guests at Jay's beach cafe, the surrounding diners took to hissing and then clapping to drown out the noise. Didn't daunt the Great Exhibitionist in the least. Ava Gardner is said to be hoisting a terrific torch for Orson who is playing the field ... John Dall and Helena Carter dancing around Mocambo and stopping at Cal's table for a chat. The two are playing in Deanna Durbin's new film "Something in the Wind" and seem to like it and each other ... After Linda Darnell returns from her vacation in Europe, she and her cameraman husband Peverell Marley hope to adopt two youngsters, which should certainly spike those separation rumors that persist in cropping up.

The Flynns: After the family, Cal was the first to glimpse the Errol Flynn baby. Errol proudly tells everyone his new daughter Rory is a real beauty, with a gleam of pride in his eyes as he looks at her. Errol seems to be establishing himself as a good father and husband.

Thinking to show Nora a good time after her long siege at home, Errol took her to Ciro's for Sunday night supper. While waiting outside for his car, an out of town heckler accosted the actor and openly insulted him. Bystanders complimented the Flynns on their dignity in ignoring the insults. Had Errol taken exception to the remarks, as any man might, headlines on a Hollywood brawl would once again have made news.
Dinner Party: Van Johnson greeted us at the door of Jean Sablon's Bel-Air suite saying, "Gee, everybody here I like." Which was a good beginning to a wonderful evening with the popular French singer entertaining Van and Evie, the Louis Jourdans, Wynn Rocomora, Corinne Calvet and Maria Montez and her husband Jean Pierre Aumont. Music and cocktails in the suite were followed by dinner in the main dining room. And what a dinner! Monsieur Jean Sablon knows his food.

Louis Jourdan, who has just finished "The Paradine Case," was anxious to know if there was any improvement in his accent since last we had seen him. He was very (Continued on page 16) pleased when we honestly stated he seemed to have none at all. Incidentally, be warned. Here's the next sensation or we miss our guess.

Cal became convulsed when Jourdan rattled off a long speech in French to Jean Pierre, and was answered in pure American—"You are so right, baby, so right."

Jean Pierre told us of his contemplated trip to Paris to make a picture and how he would miss Maria and their little daughter, Maria Christina.

Back in the suite we listened to recordings made by Sablon's sister, Germaine, now singing in New York, and Van's new record, "Goodnight Sweetheart."

"I could have done better and you know it," Van told Cal. "Bet they won't ask me to make another one."

Corinne Calvet, who was brought here from Paris to play opposite Ray Milland, is a sweater-faced blonde but certainly not typically French as we imagine them. We all decided it was such a charming dinner party we hated to leave for home.

Happy June: June Allyson is a happy, bubbly girl these days for husband Dick Powell is recovering from the penicillin poisoning that almost proved fatal and they've bought a new home in Bel-Air large enough for that family they want so much to have.

The house is an Old English type with rooms for Dick's two children, Norman and Ellen, to visit when their mother Joan Blondell is out of town.

"Heaven knows how we'll manage to get moved," Junie said, "for as soon as I finish 'Good News' I go right into 'Virtuous' with Van Johnson."

June and Dick were receiving warm smiles from all the other customers at Martha Smith's ice-cream counter which is a sure indication that here's a couple the whole town loves and wishes well.

Correction Please: Seems those reports that Joan Caulfield wasn't making too many friends on her loan-out to Warners for "The Unexpected" were mighty misleading. Joan herself told us at a recent party that on just one occasion she had a blow-up with director Mike Curtiz. It was at the end of a high-tension day when the wily Mike had been purposely working her up for the dramatic scene that was to be shot. Only Joan didn't know it until Mike told her afterward. Everything's okay because Curtiz wrote her Paramount bosses a glowing letter about her when the picture was finished and Joan herself says it's the best work she's done. That makes it unanimous.

Preview with Cary: At the press preview of "The Bachelor and the Bobby-soxer," Cary Grant slid into the next seat, saying, "I want to sit by you."

"Now just a minute," Cal parried, "this can bring on complications. Suppose, for instance, we don't like your picture. What happens then?"

"Well, you just say, 'goodnight, Cary, I'll see you sometime' and I'll say, 'well, so long. See you around.'"

But we didn't have to worry about any such thing. From the very beginning we were in hysterics with Cary, the star, not far behind. It was fun having a preview within a preview as it were, for Cary kept whispering information.

Those basketball scenes were taken at Beverly Hills High School," he said, "and the kids were wonderful to us. They got right into the spirit of it."

"Now watch Rudy Vallee in this scene. He's the funniest thing I've ever seen." He went on to explain how he had added the jail scene between him and the lawyer because it seemed more natural that way. And judging from the roars of the audience, this may start an entire new trend. "It took a week to shoot that picnic scene with (Continued on next page)

Our Bets of the Month: Martha Vickers, unmarried and beautiful, while achieving better and better screen roles, is rapidly becoming the most popular young lady in town with all the swains hovering around. Socialite Spencer Martin seems to have the inside track at the moment.

With the release of "Fiesta" we predict handsome young Ricardo Montalban, Mexican actor who once attended Fairfax High in Hollywood (Mickey Rooney's old alma mater), will be the newest hobo-sox rage—but he's married to Loretta Young's sister, Georgianna, and has two children.

Discovered all over again is Bill Holden of "Dear Ruth." (Recently Lt. Holden of the Air Force.) His boyish good looks and natural charm swept the preview audience right off their balance. We can imagine what the kids who have either forgotten about the Holden charm or are just about to get acquainted with it, think of him.

A Visitor: An under-the-weather spell that hit Cal both ways from Sunday brought the young director Fred De Cordova to call. Cal was more than glad to see him. Freddie, who has just finished directing the latest Josie film, "Wallflower," laughed off the reported feud between the players, Bob Hutton and Joyce Reynolds (her first film since the birth of her baby). Freddie explained the kids were younger and didn't seem to understand each other very well. "But that often happens," he said, "and at no time were Bob or Joyce temperamental." At any rate, he laughed, it helped each to give their best performance yet.

Home-town Boy: Dale Evans, who has been riding through most of those Western films out Republic way, tells of the recent visit of her aunt, from Uvalde, Texas.

After gifting Dale with a canary, brought from her home town, her aunt settled down in Dale's Valley home for a quiet visit.

"By the way," she remarked casually one day, "one of the boys in my Sunday

Jane Powell and radio comedian Danny Thomas compare notes at a now fest

School class back in Uvalde came to Hollywood and is doing right well too.

"Who is it?" Dale asked with some surprise.

"Andrews," the aunt replied, "Dana Andrews, Awfully nice little fellow he was, too."

Home for the Autrys: Gene Autry and his lovely Ina can hardly believe it. Along with thousands of others in the same fix, the cowboy star and his wife have been practically homeless since their beautiful Valley home burned down five years ago.

Right after the tragedy the Autrys moved into the rustic cottage on their ranch which had been intended only for weekend visits. But Ina Autry remained there throughout the war years while Gene was away with the Army Air Forces.

After the war Gene felt building materials should go to veterans who had no homes at all but now that materials are less scarce, Gene has already begun to landscape his four-acre homestead in Studio City and in the fall building will start. And maybe you think after five years it won't be good to own a home again. Or maybe you know all about that feeling.

Cowboy Takes Advice: It's rather wonderful the way Roy Rogers's fans take an interest in his three motherless children.

At the first blush of Womanhood

by VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm—There is nothing "wrong" with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike—Don't take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid's exclusive formula. That's why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself—You'll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don't be half-safe—During this "age of courtship," don't let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don't be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

Maxwell smileage:
Elsa forecasts fun as she arrives to broadcast on “Hollywood Tour”

INSIDE STUFF

Recently when Roy announced he intended taking his two little girls with him on his rodeo tour, letters poured in from Lana all over the country advising him against it. Women with small children of their own pointed out to Roy that constant travel, change of food and sleeping hours may be harmful to the children’s health. So, although he’ll be lonesome for them and they for him, he took the advice and will leave all three at home.

Happy Birthday to Tyrone: As we rang Lana Turner’s doorbell we heard laughter within. Then suddenly we were caught up in the midst of it. Cesar Romero who had arrived just ahead of us had presented Lana with a beautiful corsage of orchids—embellished in the discarded beard he’d worn all through “Captain from Castile.” “This has to adorn the dinner table,” Lana laughed placing it in the center of her beautifully laid table.

The occasion was Tyrone’s birthday. A few of his close friends had gathered to wish him happiness. Lee Cobb, who was on location in Mexico with Ty and Cesar brought his lovely brown-haired wife, the actress, Helen Beverly. They told Cal about their four-year-old Vincent and expressed a wish their next child, due very soon, might be a girl.

At dinner, Cesar had us all in stitches with his amusing anecdotes. A very funny guy, that Romero. Lana, cute and pert in trim black slacks, moaned over her aching muscles, the result of an all-day soft-ball session with Spencer Tracy down by the east side gas “walks” for a scene in “Cass Timberlane.”

Tyrone opened his gifts after dinner. A gold latticed cigarette case, a Salka scarf, a pigskin script case were among the gifts from Lana. The cigarette case designed by Lana, is one in a million. Cesar gave Ty soft wool for a sport coat, Cal, a pipe lighter. (Ty has recently gone in for pipes.) Lana was working the following day, so we left early with many happy returns.

The Final Take: It was the last day of shooting on the “Scudda Hoo, Scudda Hay” set out on the back lot of Twentieth Century-Fox and while the bride, June Havener, had her curls combed out for the final take, Cal chatted with her in the portable dressing room. All bubbly with excitement and happiness she told us of the month she and her groom, Jimmy Zito will have together in San Francisco when Jimmy’s band opens there for an engagement. June will loaf, rest and listen. Then they’ll hie off to Chicago to visit all those friends and relations of Jimmy’s, going on to New York where June will spend several weeks playing summer stock in (Continued on page 22)

And that tonsillectomy of Michael's was not due to a sore throat or even a doctor's decision. Director Mike Curtiz and a diction teacher just decided North could enunciate better without them, so out they came.

Newcomer: Introducing newcomers to the press is strictly routine in Hollywood but when Douglas Fairbanks Jr. bade us meet his new leading lady, Paule Croset (pronounced Paul Cro-say), we found ourselves delightfully surprised. Miss Croset's natural blonde beauty, honesty and unsophisticated eagerness were quite the most refreshing we've bowed to in ages.

Born in Tahiti of Swiss-French parents, Paule traveled the world wide with her father and was living in Korea when war broke out. Managing to get to the States, Paule fell in love with California and sought a screen career in order to stay here. Her English is perfect and so is her French, German, Italian and Chinese.

"I played only bits at RKO for two years but I studied very hard at the Actors' Lab," she said. Her knowledge of the world plus her good looks, won her the role with Doug.

And by the way, friends, after you've seen Miss Croset, write us and tell us your reaction. Unless something unforeseen happens to Paule on the screen, we believe you, too, will be Croset fans.

The Sinatras Spruce up: Several years ago the Frank Sinatras bought twenty acres on a wooded hill near Tarzana with plans to build their dream house. But with building materials scarce and costly, they recently abandoned their plan for a new house and after selling several of the acres, decided to remodel their Toluca Lake house to fit their present needs.

The balcony that ran along the rear of the three bedrooms was torn out and little Nancy's room made larger as he felt the needs of a growing young miss.

Frank Jr.'s room was redecorated to look more like a boy's room; the extra space left to the room of Frank Sr. and Nancy was converted into more closet space. Every night for weeks when Frank returned home, he stumbled over painters, buckets, carpenters, tools, paperhangers and draperies. The old wartime carpet that buckled in the middle was replaced with new, softer rugs. New drapes, fresh paint and wall paper have now transformed the Sinatra home into a more comfortable and charming place to live.

Incidentally, that new television set presented Frank by CBS occupies an important spot in the play room.

Putting on the Dog: It's been an animal year in pictures come to think of it with Lassie a dog, Flicka a horse, Flagg a yearling doe, grabbing off huge chunks of public interest. Even before PRC's picture "The Return of Rin Tin Tin" was released letters began pouring in asking for all sorts of information concerning the talented canine. He is, we're told, a grandson of the famous Rin Tin Tin of silent films who made fortunes for his backers, both in films and in personal appearances.

Rin Tin Tin III was born on the ranch of his owner Lee Duncan near Riverside, California. When World War II broke out Lee and his dog volunteered for service. The dog's mother, Truline Van Pondview, also in service, was killed in action in the jungles of the South Pacific. Rin Tin Tin III, however, was too valuable as a trainer of other dogs and as an entertainer to be sent into action.

The requirements of sound and color films have raised the standards of dog actors considerably higher than those of silent film days and the fans, sensing the skill of canine performers, are most appreciative. Certainly the performance of this great dog in his first picture since the war has earned applause from all who have seen it.

Parental pastime: New parents Jeane Crain and Paul Brinkman celebrate with hamburgers and mustard at Fox Studio party.

Olga San Juan, delightful charmer in "Variety Girl"

SHE rolls her r's, her eyes and her hips in true Latin style. But she was born in Brooklyn and doesn't care who knows it. Her real name is Olga San Juan, and at home her Puerto Rican family still speak Spanish.

The White House, no less, was the scene of her debut as a singer when Olga and 134 other New York school children presented a program for the late President Roosevelt. It was a hard pull from that White House caroling to the warm little tamale of "Blue Skies" but Olga sang and samba'ed her way to success.

She was in the ninth grade at school when her father took ill. So Olga terminated her education and put to practical use the knowledge she'd gathered from her singing and dancing teachers. She began by giving Sunday presentations at New York's El Morocco. Then she was given the chance to present bolero numbers at the Astor Hotel. This brought her to a crossroad in her life. She could sign either with Xavier Cugat's band or accept an offer from New York's Copacabana. She chose the latter and with the aid of the show's producer Don Loper, who designed her clothes and coiffure, Olga was a hit.

Hollywood stars and executives carried home tales of Olga's talent and soon Paramount signed her. She capered through two Technicolor featurettes, and then went on to her role in "Blue Skies," singing and dancing with Fred Astaire, a feat that didn't scare her a bit, she says.

In true Hollywood style Paramount decided to forget Olga's singing and dancing talent and cast her in a straight role in "Variety Girl." Her raven hair was bleached a golden blonde which highlights rather pleasingly her hazel eyes and pale olive skin. Her friends can't make up their minds whether to like it or loathe it. Olga says, "For a change it's all right."

Twenty-year-old Olga is far from the bombs-bursting-in-air Latin we've come to accept as a type. Demure and rather shy, except for those rhythmic Brazilian songs and Cuban sambas, she could be a typical North American girl. She likes American food, is crazy about watercress salad, nice quiet boys and tennis.

She lives with her grandmother, whom she brought from Puerto Rico. Her grandmother is thirteen-year-old sister, out San Fernando Valley way.

Pretty and shapely, men swarm around her in droves, but somehow Olga manages to keep her Puerto Rican equilibrium, or maybe she knows what they really do on a rainy night in Rio.

ADVENTURES, THE—The Eagle-Lion: This Adventure is Deborah Kerr whom you’ll see soon with Clark Gable. In this one, she gives you shivers plus laughs as the little Irish Gilligan she determined to get mixed up in some spy business. Trevor Howard helps her along. (July)

BEAT THE BAND—RKO: Gene Krupa and his band try to beat the sense into this, but even with Frances Langford and Phil Terry churning in musically it turns out a little. You may take lessons from orchestra leader Terry, masquerading as a classical maestro. (June)

BEGINNING OR THE END, THE—M-G-M: This William Wyler directed film leads into a 20th-century history. He tells it here and at the same time is supposed to be irresistible to women. Claire Trevor is the actress that turns by turning had just for him, while Walter Brennan and Er Leigh Cook Jr. carry on convincingly. (July)

BRAHMS DOUBLOON, THE—20th Century-Fox: George Raft plays a Rotary Club detective and he’s a very valuable coin. Meant to be a chiller-diller. (May)

BUCK PRIVATES COME HOME—Universal-International: A farseen story. Then you’ll probably like this gagged-up bit about their return home front and their tangle with copper Nat Pendleton. Silly comedy. (June)

CALCUTTA—Paramount: Enough action out in Calcutta centering around American flyer Alan Ladd, his pal Bill Bendix and Gary Russel to keep you wondering who did the jewel theft. (June)

CARNEGIE HALL—Federal-U-A: The list of guest artists in this, from Walter Damrosch to Harry James, reads like a benefit performance and that’s just about what it is. You can expect and get—beautiful music with Pons, Pistizgory, Stevens, Ralright, Hefter, and more whom you can practically forget the plot. (July)

CHEYENNE—Warner’s: Nice bad man Dennis Morgan is fascinating to both Jane Wyman and Janis Paige down to earth the stage-cowboy robery days of old Cheyenne, Annomous character. The Plot” puts this in a different—good—and—class—that story. (June) CHILDREN ON TRIAL—English Films: England shares her juvenile delinquency problems with America in a documentary about two children reformed through approved “school. The children’s training and the child’s actual training are shown realistically enrolled in the school. (July)

CHRISTMAS EVE—Bogue-U-A: Why was this ever produced? It has a confused plot about old lady Ann Harding is taken by adopted son George Raft, George Brent and Randolph Scott about her Christmas Eve. (July)

COPACABANA—Consol-U-A: If you’re entertained by George Rauch and Carmen Miranda Career in Carnival, you’ll have a good evening’s entertainment. (July)

DEHONORED LADY—Chorck-Stromberg-U-A: Nothing real about this business and Harry Lime’s Maya Shirley; She manages to look imperious even when she needs to. John Loder tries to be a wolf and poor Dorothy Lamour is the girl who can’t know what to make of the whole thing. (July)

DOWN TO EARTH—Columbia: Rita Hayworth comes down to earth the way Linda Darnell does in playing the lead in Larry Parks’ musical. She sits a celestial trophy on the stage and almost spoils everything until Mr. Jorden with his straight lines lots of songs and dances in Technicolor. (July)

DUEL IN THE SUN—Vanguard: Jennifer Jones loves two men—wild-out sower Gregory Peck and his ever-been brother Joseph Cotten way down in Texas. It’s a big picture and it’s easy seeing and Lash and Gish and Lorne Barrymore, still, don’t make it any more than a dressed-up melodrammer. (June)

EGG AND IV, THE—Universal: The rough-and-ready little sinner who gets the shaft out of this film turned into a rather scrambled egg with Fred MacMurray and Claire Trevor looking chic in a chic setting. There’s a blonde millionairess down the road; and one of the cuties is clean! Marjorie Main helps some but not enough. (May)

ESCAPE ME NEVER—Warner’s: Errol Flynn, Eleanor Parker, Ida Lupino and Gig Young cavort around lightly for the first half, then get muddled in a tear-jerking set. Flynn’s loop around from the Tyrold to London slums. (May)

FARMER’S DAUGHTER, THE—RKO: This is the way democratic politics should work, with Joseph Cotten, Loretta Young and Ethel Barrymore. Farmers things, Loretta is the servant Katy in Cotton’s home and that the dovecot producer makes an amusing make-believe event. (June)

FRAMED—Columbia: Glenn Ford gets picked up, then let down by beautiful schemer Janis Carter. Filled with Ford’s special brand of acting. (June)

GHOST GOES WEST, THE—Republic: Everybody is going wild in this too. James Ellison and his brother look so real. Ford and Harold Peary walk in and out but while Anne Gwynne registers horror. Ruth Donnelly gets there. (July)

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN—M-G-M: As perky goings-on in Brooklyn as you’d want it with real Frank Sinu and Carol Channing and singer with music teacher Kathryn Grayson. Jimmy Durante is the rascalistic mumpier and Peter Lawford is the nice guy. Loretta Young is wonderful. (July)

IT HAPPENED ON FIFTH AVENUE—Allied Artists: Unpretentious and highly amusing, this has Victor Moore as a Transplant who borrows tycoon Charlie Ruggles’ $550,000 mansion while Charlie’s away. Lots of honey fun, (May)

AN EDITORIAL

BY JAMES M. CAIN

Mr. Leo Birinski, in recent years a picture writer, before that a playwright, once did a play called "Narrentanz," which had quite a vogue in Middle Europe, and which furnishes a viewpoint, it seems to me, on this question of Communism and Counter-Communism currently so hot in the picture business. It was based on a curious and little-known aspect of the Russian Revolution of 1905, in which certain spots were designated by the Revolutionists as neutral ground, where for various reasons, such as the safety of their archives, they permitted no disturbances, and life was quiet. In the play, the Governor of one such place was shown as quite unhappy, because though other governors were getting large sums from St. Petersburg to suppress the revolution he was getting none, a situation thus arising which was distressing to the gubernatorial, to say nothing of the Slavic mind. So, to stir up a little revolution he arranged an attentat on his life, a shot outside the window neatly pulled off by his secretary; but the chief revolutionary, thinking fast, made the thing personal, rather than political, by saying he fired the shot because he was in love with the Governor's wife. From there on in, as you might suppose, it was a delightful piece of nonsense.

But it embodied a principle which I believe both sides in this dispute might reflect on with the utmost concern. It is this: There can be areas where even the most fanatical Red can properly keep hands off, and where even the most well-intended counter-Red activities can easily verge on the absurd. That pictures should become such an area must be evident to all who have their well-being at heart. For, despite the megalomania of Hollywood, which tends to assume that because it speaks to the world it also speaks for the world, the conflict

In my thirty years of interviewing I have never talked with a woman laboring under such emotional strain as Laraine Day on the day she came to my home straight from the courtroom.

For five days a battery of lawyers had been trying to prove collusion in Laraine’s divorce from Ray Hendricks.

She had sat within the range of a legal finger pointing her out as one who had flaunted the divorce laws of California so she could quickly get rid of one man to marry another in Mexico “without regard for the code of decency or conventions.”

She had listened to Leo Durocher, the man she loves, called a man who deserts a woman in time of crisis. “Where is this Romeo? Why isn’t this dashing cavalier at her side when she needs him most?” the prosecution had shouted.

The strain had left marks that a day, that a week or a year cannot erase, no matter how hard she tries to forget. Laraine was so pitifully thin it was obvious it will take a long time to build back her emotional and physical health.

All the time we talked her hands trembled so noticeably that she had to clasp them to keep them under control. Her eyes filled constantly with tears that could not spill over in the welcome relief tears usually bring to most of us in trouble. Even a stone image would have been affected by this girl.

I think right here is the place to say I have no intention of arguing the moral or legal questions arising from Laraine's divorce from Ray Hendricks and her subsequent firecracker-setting-off marriage to Leo "Lippy" Durocher.

The Judge presiding on the case proclaimed her divorce from Hendricks valid. He did not condone her conduct in quickly marrying Durocher. These legal technicalities are out of my province. Legally she is divorced from Ray Hendricks and what I, personally, think about the second divorce and remarriage of Laraine (Continued on page 90)

It was the story of a dancing girl and a hard-boiled stage manager,

There was a girl in a very tiny

The title of the picture was "Dancing Lady" and the stars of it were Joan Crawford and Clark Gable.
The audience of two that watched it a few weeks ago was Joan Crawford and myself. We were seated in her home projection room.
When Joan switched on the lights, I looked at her in absolute wonderment. Fourteen years had passed and yet the woman we had just seen on the (Continued on page 110)

BY HYMIE FINK

"Anatole Litvak, Ty's house-mate, was supposed to join them—but didn't show up in time"

"No side-door exit for these two.
They even stopped for autographs"

I WAS at Ciro's on my regular rounds of the night clubs. Nothing much doing, so I phoned La Rue, Mocambo and the Chanteclair to ask who was there. Horseshoes! The headwaiter at the Chanteclair said Lana and Ty just walked in. I took my car and beat it out to the Strip to this newest lush dine-and-dance spot.

Sure enough, there were Lana and Ty. Strictly a cameramen's field day because this was just about the first time they had been seen publicly together in Hollywood since their hectic romance had blossomed. Anyway, the first time we boys had caught them—and you know how we hate to hear about a romance and then go camera-empty. And now here they were.

Seems since it was maid's night out, Ty had picked Lana up and they had dropped by for a "quick bite." Ty and I gobbled about our stay in Mexico when Ty was on location for "Captain from Castile." He thanked me for the swell layout of color shots I took on that trip. That gave me my chance to ask for some pictures. Both he and Lana were mighty nice, said I could take as many as I wanted, as long as they didn't have to pose.

That's what I call horseshoes!

MY STORY begins with a lonely little girl. . . .
Her mother died when she was two years old.
Her father, it is true, sought to be both parents to her—and her friend. But he was an artist and so, more often than not, he was preoccupied with his paints and his brushes and his cameras, his own loneliness and his dreams. Nor was he with her long. He died when she was twelve, and she goes to live with an aunt and uncle, who were very strict. She used to stand outside the schoolhouse, this little girl, and watch her classmates, met by their mothers, go off on shopping sprees and gay excursions in the town. And sometimes she dreamed that she too came out of school to find a mother waiting; that she slipped her hand into a mother's hand and they walked off together laughing and

PETER LAWFORD was walking down Hollywood Boulevard. He was discussing the weather, the new sports jacket, Modacrylic, and a few serious things like that with his Metro friends, Jack Cummings and Jack Donohue.

Suddenly from out of the nowhere—a record shop to be precise—some hot boogie music changed the Boulevard into a jive palace. Forgetting his companions, Pete went into his dance. People stopped and stared. Even in Hollywood it’s not a common sight to see a well-dressed young man of twenty-three with a face you know you’ve seen in the movies, jiving and swinging on the sidewalk. But more important, Pete’s two companions, stopped and stared.

When they came to, Jack Cummings, the producer of "It Happened in Brooklyn," put in a call to Isobel Lennart, the author of the Brooklyn opus. (Continued on page 83)

Her hair is cool sunshine, her skin is warm snow. Her unpowdered snub nose astonishes you with its proximity to a mouth of womanly fullness. A figure as clean-lined as a child's, but intricately curved. She is totally uncalculated, yet with all sorts of promises in the lil of her voice.

"How did I feel about losing 'Amber'? Well, I can't deny it was like having a lovely jewel, or some other wonderful gift, and then having to give it back.

She played the Andante from Haydn's "Surprise Symphony" at seven—and won first prize.

This portrait won June Haver entry in M-G-M contest.

TO THE little blonde girl sitting bolt upright in her straight-backed chair on the stage of the old Albee Theater in Cincinnati, this was the ultimate ordeal. This was the culmination of a long series of trials which had placed her, at last, among the four who had survived out of 1,900.

June Stovenour (whom the world was later to acclaim as June Haver) stole a glance at the small brunette who was sitting beside her. An inner prescience warned that this one would prove the sternest competition she had yet met. There was a determination, almost fierce, in the young face beside her. June suddenly felt a spurt of uneasiness. To reassure herself she forced her thoughts back over the path she had traveled leading to this final moment.

There had been the hard-won prize for oratory; the four music contests in each of which she had achieved first place, playing the "Andante" from the "Surprise Symphony" by Haydn for Eugene Goossens, conductor of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. She had won the Shirley Temple contest, singing a medley of Shirley Temple songs and doing a (Continued on page 86)
A barefoot boy has joined the cast of “The Happy Family”—the billing now reads, “The Four Ladds”

BY WYNN ROBERTS

The small, luxurious but definitely crowded Ladd house was in a turmoil. Flowers were arriving. Telegrams were arriving. The phones were ringing.

The hospital nurse, who had accompanied Sue home, conferred with Kathleen, the nurse who has been at the Ladds’ ever since their daughter Alana was born four years ago.

Susie had been carried upstairs and installed in the master bedroom, the self-same exquisite room in which she had waited an interminable eleven months for young David to make his debut on earth.

Alan, who had forgotten all about the studio while rushing up- and downstairs on emergency errands, paused for one moment in the dark green drawing room, and lighted a cigarette. He was about to draw a sigh of relief at having an instant alone, when he became aware of Alana. She had slipped noiselessly into the room and was standing beside him.

Distracted by a thousand details, Alan spoke quickly. “George will give you your dinner,” he said, referring to the Ladd butler.

Alana’s tiny figure began to shake as terribly as though an icy wind had struck through the room.

The Littlest Ladd

Then, without warning, she started to scream.

"I grabbed her and I said, 'You get into that dining room and eat,'" Alan now tells the story.

"I was ready to give her hell, for I hate rude children, but then I suddenly realized what was happening to that youngster. For four years Susie and her nurse and I had been constantly with her. We'd fed her and dressed her and done everything for her.

"But now she was being ignored for a small, red thing up in a corner of her room, in the bassinette that had once been hers. She had known nothing but love and care, and now she felt shut out.

"I gathered her up in my arms, and I apologized to her. I went into the dining room with her and ordered dinner for just us. It was the first meal

"I let her eat her ice cream while sitting on my lap and as she finished she whispered up to me, 'Daddy, you don't like sons better than daughters, do you?"

"It took a moment before I could answer her. Then I leaned down and whispered back, 'Of course, I don't.' And that's the truth. It's wonderful to have a boy—but it's no more wonderful than having a girl. I know that other guys go around singing and dancing and passing out cigars when they have a son—but I don't get what that proves. I'm glad David is here. I'm glad that Sue is well again, after that very tough time she had. But that boy will (Continued on page 79)

Stream-lined simplicity by day—dream-lined elegance by night; the fashion accent in Hollywood is now on a dual personality.

Photoplay's Reporter-about-town
THERE are two definite trends in Hollywood this season and the word is “trends,” not “styles.” Fortunately for all concerned these trends bring a wide variety of styles, fabrics and silhouettes. The days of stereotyped fashion are over. It’s no longer necessary for any gal to conform to set rules of design—whether flattering or unflattering—simply because these rules are set up as the “fashion” or “look” of the season.

Most of the stars are choosing to wear clothes of great simplicity for daytime wear. Of course they’re accentuated by smartly designed hats and sleek accessories. The hair styles, I note, are modest, most of them a variation of the chignon—minus rattings and lacquer. Then at five p.m. the picture changes; coiffures become loose bobs or exaggerated creations, but still pretty. And beginning with the cocktail hour (Continued on page 115)

You don’t interview a guy like Jimmy, as Susan finds out. You just relax and talk—about the gosh-darndest things!

BY SUSAN PETERS

JIMMY STEWART and I were not exactly strangers. We had first been introduced a long time ago at a party given by Joan Crawford. I had said, “How do you do.” He had responded, gallantly, “How do you do.”

Fate had thrown us together on another memorable occasion. Mr. Stewart, coming into Chasen’s restaurant, had stopped at my table and we had had a soul-to-soul talk revolving around our mutual regard for the delights of Mr. Chasen’s spinach salad.

However, you could scarcely call us bosom pals, even in the Hollywood manner. So when I was assigned to interview Mr. S. it was quite a different proposition from the other articles I had written in PHOTOPLAY’s series, “My Hollywood Friends.” This time I would have to start from scratch without benefit of long association and mutual regard.

Consequently, there was much pencil-chewing before I was able to compile a list of crafty questions, all calculated to elicit confidences that would make this interview a sensational, soul-searching session. Such questions as, “Do you like sour cream in borscht?” and “Which shoe do you put on first in the morning?”

In he came, at the appointed hour, a lank, diffident man in a leather flying jacket, a scarf, trousers, shoes and a head cold. He eased his six-foot-several down on my sofa, and with his first words my fancy list of questions flew out of the window.

“Ya know,” he drawled, “some interviewers ask the doggondest questions. Why one girl asked me once if I liked sauerkraut! Honest! Now let’s face it, who the heck cares?”

Well, you don’t have to (Continued on page 76)

Photoplay’s bemused investigator takes a second look at the swimsuit crisis and decides it’s much ado about nothing

A modest muchacha, Olga San Juan does a two-way stretch

A SPECIAL investigating committee has been quietly looking into Hollywood bathing suits. Those symbols of our Hollywood way of life as worn by the founding mothers, the Mack Sennett Bathing Girls, are in danger of vanishing like sunbonnets.

Already we have diaper trunks; other suits have reached the vanishing point or points at which rhinestones, sequins or bubble gum are affixed to appease propriety; and Miss Gypsy Rose Lee is rumored to have been forced to retire to Wisconsin woods to strip for squirrels.

Everyone says civilization is collapsing. But need the Bathing Suit collapse along with it?

Miss Romay, a Latin wriggle in hoop earrings and beaded suit, of all things, was first witness subpoenaed by the investigating committee.

"There are tricks in bathing suits," Miss Romay testified.

"We observe," said the committee.

A Latin trick! Lina Romay had nothing to hide—proved it in a beaded lastex no-swim suit

Esther Williams, star of "Fiesta," reeled off a line about baby oil, wards off pool wolves in one-piece swimsuits

“No dear,” said Miss Romay. “Tricks in design to make women look better. They hide things.”

“Continue!” cried the alert committee.

“Some people have little rolls of fat here,” said Miss Romay, clutching in vain at her hips and then poking the committee exultantly, “there!”

She was sharply reminded that investigation of investigators is not congressional.

According to Miss Romay, women have a tendency to overflow their banks and designing suits to make them look streamy is an engineering feat beside which the damming of the Colorado is a beaver’s job. The trick lies in the cutting. Irene, designer for Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, is a sheer genius.

“She could make an old tub look like a speedboat,” said Miss Romay smiling pointedly at the committee.

The committee was on the point of holding Miss Romay in contempt for that crack but on second glance decided just to hold her.

The second investigation, after a breathing spell, revolved around Miss Olga San Juan or rather Olga revolved around it, being another Latin rumbalutionist. (The committee disclaims partiality but holds, with President Truman, the warmest feeling for our Latin American sisters.)

Miss San Juan chose to appear in a one-piece banana-gold metallic job in tribute to Puerto Rico where she spent her early childhood eating bananas.

"Viva Puerto Rico! Olé bananas!" cried the committee rising.

A modest muchacha, as Latin girls invariably are, Miss San Juan was wide-eyed with warning against diaper swim trunks. Miss San Juan saw a horrifying thing happen at Santa Monica. A girl lost hers in the breakers and drifted around for hours like a glass-bottom boat.

Miss San Juan warned her Paramount colleague, Miss Virginia Welles, who, being cute as a sandab, had been persuaded into one of those baby suits. Miss Welles despised it. She swims like a whizz from Wisconsin lakes and prefers a one-piece suit as good swimmers do. Besides, she thinks a two-piece makes a short girl appear sawed in half.

You walked into a party where the most beautiful girl in the world was holding court. Awed, you said to yourself, “What chance has any average girl against such knock-out beauty?”

But by the end of the evening—what had happened? You had discovered that it was not Miss Glamour at all who held the men spellbound for the bulk of the party—no, indeed. It was Miss Mousey, the plain woman in the quiet black dress. She had a certain magic, it almost seemed a definite beauty... and you spent days trying to figure out what it was.

That’s happened to me, too, and it will happen to both of us over and over again. But next time we’ll be prepared to understand that woman’s power. Because, right here and now, we are going to examine her magic and see of what it consists. And we’re going to use lovely Joan Leslie as our spokesman—for Joan’s formula for living would make her beautiful if she had no physical beauty at all.

WHAT is it like to be married to Jean Pierre Aumont? I will simply tell you this: I budget our lives; Jean Pierre unbudgets them. It is I who make all hotel and train reservations; it is Jean Pierre who makes us miss trains and lose hotel rooms! My husband is delightfully happy-go-lucky—I am much, much too methodical. The result is complete pandemonium. But I wouldn’t do without it because I couldn’t do without Jean Pierre!

Jean Pierre is like this, exactly:

Picture the eve of our departure for Europe a few months ago. My suitcases were being carried to the car for the drive to the airport—packed with dresses and hats. There was no sign of Jean Pierre. As usual, he had left his packing until the last second. Finally I called to him frantically—and he appeared. He was carrying one dejected old suitcase, tied up with rope!

I was horrified. “Jean Pierre!” I wailed. “Is that all you’re taking with you? Did you put in your tails? Remember we will be entertained like mad in Paris!”

He shrugged and grinned at me. “No tails. In Paris these sad days they are passé. I left them in my closet.”

You already know what happened. The instant we reached Paris, we were invited to London to the Command Performance of the King and Queen, the first time royalty had (Continued on page 108)
Where there's smoke, there's fire—if it's Rory Calhoun, who's all ablaze about everything

By HELEN LOUISE WALKER

If you had met Rory Calhoun for the first time one day this past spring, you would have decided here was a first-class roustabout.

The black hair with its widow's peak looked as if it had just come through a high wind—or vice versa. The broad shoulders were anything but enhanced by the rumpled shirt which wouldn't stay down in the back. It wouldn't for the very good reason there was nothing to stay down, the shirttail being conspicuous by its absence.

But the crowning touch was the remnant of lipstick still shamelessly evident on his face.

A flash of triumph lighted his electric blue-green eyes. For his were the ravages of success. He had just completed his first solo flight. Whereupon the seasoned fliers seized the astonished fledgling, ripped off the tail of his shirt and tacked it up on the bulletin board of the airport with the name and date on it and the number of hours he spent in the air.

The lipstick? That, too was the result of masculine hands which inscribed cabalistic designs on his face. Thus was he made a member of the secret order of the air. Nice going—especially for the shirttail.

Rory had had no special aspirations to be a birdman until he'd gone out to an airfield near Los Angeles for some publicity pictures. Then suddenly he became obsessed with the idea of learning to fly. And learn to fly he did—in just two weeks and seven lessons.

While the congratulations on a remarkably short period of training were still raining (Continued on page 102)

Dear Miss Colbert:

I happen to be a man married to a lovely woman with two daughters by a previous marriage. A more wonderful wife, and a more perfect companion could not be found. I am thirty-eight and my wife is forty-two. We have been married three years. When I met the family, my wife's daughters were twelve and ten; so they are now sixteen and fourteen.

The younger daughter is smart and cooperative. She gets top grades in school, reads widely, and helps her mother, who has retained her office position, do the housekeeping. She is always thinking of sweet things to do for both of us.

The older girl is lazy, poor in school, sullenly around the house and about her person, and sullen in her relationship with all of us. She has no respect for any sort of authority. We allowed her to attend a formal party recently, specifying that she was to be home by one o'clock. She arrived at two-thirty. Two weeks later, we allowed her another date, stating that this time she must be in-at midnight. She arrived at one-thirty.

In family discussion she waits until she finds out what the rest of us believe, then she takes the opposite stand. When asked what she plans to do after she is graduated from high school, she said she had her own ideas, "which is all that is necessary."

I know that a good school would be just the thing for her, but unfortunately a good one is beyond our means, and we wouldn't think of trusting her to a mediocre faculty.

Both my wife and I would like your advice on this matter.

G. B. C.

I am sincerely glad that you wrote to me about this problem.

Nowadays, psychiatrists suggest that children be spaced four years apart for this reason: A child of four may be reasoned with, whereas a child under four supplemented by a new baby feels itself alienated from its mother. It misbehaves to gain attention. If the mother fails to understand the child's panic, and punishes instead of reasoning with it, the child feels indeed that it is an outcast.

In your family, the younger daughter gets all the compliments, the older all the rebukes. The reasons for her misbehaviour are beyond her own understanding. You and your wife must help her.

"Not even then," said Miss Welles, a spirited lark and earnest actress who was about to take off to the University of Wisconsin to take a summer course in drama.

MISS ESTHER WILLIAMS, only professional woman swimmer to succeed as an actress, is best authority on what a girl should wear in the water.

"I always wear a thin coat of baby oil," said Miss Williams.

Baby oil, the committee was hastily informed, is absorbable and protects skin from drying effect of salt in sea and chlorine in pools.

Those rhinestone and phosphorescent suits you have seen on Miss Williams are chic for pictures only. If she wore them at sea the fish would chase her. Bright objects are bait for fish. Miss Williams in rhinestone might make quite a catespule if she were to be exhibited in those items. The fish at night sound exactly like Jimmy. It's infuriating, says Mr. Durante. Girls passing at night might think he was calling to them and leap in only to get a frog in the throat.

Lewis Milestone has dumped tons of sea salt into his pool to give it the tonic zing of the sea that makes a man tingle. Hearing of this, Miss San Juan dumped chlorine into her pool.

Bathing suits are worn everywhere in Hollywood in summer, for sports events, for shopping on the Boulevard, for business such as car-hopping soda-jerking and assisting dentists to keep patients' minds off the drill. They are even worn on diplomatic missions.

That scintillating ambassador of good thrill, Miss Lana Turner, on her trip to Mexico packed in white satin suits afame with red flowers edged in sequins. Up till then the biggest horticultural show in Mexico had been the floating gardens of Yucatan, but these floating islands are flat. Miss Turner is not. As a float Miss Turner was voted sweepstakes by Mexican caballeros who are notorious flower-lovers.

Mexican feeling toward the United States was never warmer, said President Mexico. Now President Truman is being urged to drop Miss Turner in the Kremlin pool. It is argued the effect would be more devastating than the atom bomb. If man ignobly prefers the bomb to Lana, all life may revert to that primordial ooze from which our polliwog ancestors emerged inevitability when taxes were low.

But bomb or Lana, the committee sees no cause for melancholy. "Toujours gai!" is the committee's motto.

The lonely years passed and this girl, in her teens, found it less and less fun to be with boys and girls her own age. She began with drawings from geometrical shapes to such an extent that she found it difficult to say or to do those little things that other girls seemed to do quite casually. All because, growing fast, she felt herself unattractive; as if she were all head and feet.

More and more she went alone to the snowy hills of her northern homeland and found physical freedom at least, flying down those slopes where nobody to see was quite adept in executing the most difficult turns. Presently she became a ski champion.

It was John Bernadotte, grandson of the King of Sweden, who told me about her being a ski champion. She had never mentioned it. She wouldn't. Her childhood and adolescence had left her too shy and reserved. So she was an enigma in Hollywood.

For the girl of whom I write is Ingrid Bergman...

I predict, however, that from now on Ingrid will hold her own in Hollywood's social ranks. For she has emerged from her six triumphant months on Broadway lovely and poised, secure and unafraid.

I know one, of course, could experience the sensational success Ingrid has known this year and have remained the same. It's been a long time since New York's drama critics have had such praise for any actress. And the public concurred. At every performance at the Alvin Theater where Ingrid played, the "Standing Room Only" sign was out. And illustrious persons from every walk of life have purchased their tickets to see her weeks in advance.

At the same time movie houses all over the country—showing her latest films, "Saratoga Trunk," "The Bells of St. Mary's" and "Notorious"—were crowded to capacity. No actress ever had a known more gala year.

PHOTOPLAY's Gold Medal went to Ingrid as a result of the survey conducted by Dr. George Gallup's Audience Research Inc., in which men and women, rich and poor, young and old, voted her the most popular actress of 1946. . . . The Minister of Sweden, Svante Fish, was presented to her with the King of Sweden's Award. . . . Helen Hayes, First Lady of the American Theater, presented her with the Drama League Medal.

"Ingrid Bergman's presence here is an historical event," she told the people of the theater gathered at that luncheon. "The theater has been enriched. It is not only her talent and her beauty but also her graciousness that brings me to say we are proud of her.

"She says she is going back to Hollywood to make a picture. But we are only lending her to Hollywood. For we know the theater have adopted her and she now belongs to us."

Ingrid had prepared a little speech of acceptance. But she never made it. As Helen Hayes spoke, the tears began to flow. Ingrid's hands began to tremble. And when she arose to face a great ovation she could not talk. She blurted out a few meaningless words, then said impulsively, "I have to kiss Helen Hayes. Excuse me!"

Whereupon she rushed to Helen Hayes and threw her arms around her and for a full moment they held each other close. There were other awards, too numerous to mention. Preceding her to Hollywood went a crate of them, packed carefully by Ingrid herself.

Invariably, too, when she left the theater the crowds at the stage door would build up. And stagehands had to clear a lane to her car. "There she is," the cry would arise. And as she passed down the little break in the hunches, smiling in her gentle way, there would be such whispers as "Isn't she beautiful . . . " or "She's the most graceful of them all . . . "

Naturally Ingrid has been aware for years now that she ranks as an attractive woman, even in Hollywood. Nor has she been lonely. She has had her husband, Peter, and her daughter, Pia. She has had a few selected friends. But still the behavior pattern she acquired in her youth, when all behavior patterns were formed, persisted in her reticence and her shyness.

Usually six months would be too short a time to change a personality pattern as deeply rooted as Ingrid's. But not such six months as she has just known. For in these months she has tasted greater triumph than comes to most in an entire lifetime.

I noticed the first change in Ingrid drama of the stage after the announcement Maxwell Anderson announced he hoped to get her for "Joan of Lorraine." We were at a party at George Cukor's. George, directed Ingrid in "Gaslight."

"I'm working on the story of Joan of Arc as a new play," Maxwell Anderson told me.

Don't you think George Bernard Shaw did that pretty well a long time ago?" "My, my, how different!"

"Who is to play Joan? I asked.

It was a tactless question. Katie Hepburn was there. Garbo too, although, as always, Garbo disappeared after Ingrid arrived. There is rivalry here, I think. Garbo feeling that Ingrid, also Swedish, has usurped the place she once knew upon the screen. Both Katie and Garbo were eager for the role. And somehow I put Maxwell Anderson on a spot.

But he did not mince words. "Who is to play Joan? he said. "Who but Ingrid?"

Ingrid blossomed that evening, talked and laughed as never before.

Several months later I met her again, this time at the Anderson's country house up in New York State. Helen Hayes was there. So was Charlie MacArthur, Pauline Godward and Burgess Meredith. Jinx Falkenburg and Tex McCrary. Milt Canif, the wonderful comic strip artist, and his wife, Jo, were there. She crept into the room. She was not listless. She was not shy. Watching her, I no longer thought, "What a pity these stars can't be normal!" She came into the room, smiling. She looked radiant. She opened the eyes of one and all.

But she also asked intelligent questions and offered colorful and interesting opinions. And she had a delightful humor. In fact, before the evening was over everybody had a definite inkling of the way they were to feel about Ingrid before her season on Broadway was over.

Ingrid is back in California now. A new woman. And, I suspect, a happier woman. For, freed of the inhibitions her lonely youth so long imposed upon her, she now is able to relax, to meet all the charming and intelligent people who have always wanted to know her, to have fun.

She flew back to California the day after her theater contract ended and the play closed—because there was no other actress who could or would follow her on Broadway. She was weary. Her New York schedule had included two charity appearances every week, numerous professional luncheons, interviews, photographic sittings, all the acclaim, all the honors—and eight performances a week in a role which undoubtedly was the most demanding, physically and historically, that the stage has seen for many a moon.

She also was very homesick for her husband, Doctor Peter Lindstrom, and their eight-year-old daughter Pia. In spite of the fact that the doctor and Pia had visited her in New York at Christmas and the doctor, alone, had flown on for weekends whenever his work permitted.

"I am going to call my friends," she told me, "including the producer and director with whom I will make 'Joan of Lorraine' as a movie and say 'Hello, how are you?' And then I am going to ask them not even to call me for three weeks—to make believe I am not yet home.

"So I may rest—and visit my family—and do little else, except perhaps walk in my woods and read some new books."

She is a great walker and a great reader. Almost always she walked from her hotel to the theater and whatever her schedule she reads at least two books a week. Her appetite for knowledge and experience is great. She wants to travel all over the world, meet different kinds of people in different walks of life, talk to them of their work, partake with them of their food.

She has an exploring mind.

Home to Ingrid is a house of stone and rafters up in the hills which rise above the fashionable Benedict Canyon. She calls it 'The Barn' because it is, literally, a barn built onto a great raftered living room. Directly opposite the living room door is a fireplace above. Ingrid calls this her den. And the embasure of a window here, as deep as the great stones from which the house is built, she has heretofore designated as her trophy room. But it won't hold her trophies now.

To the right of the entrance door there is a large bow window with a built-in seat complemented by a table. This she calls her breakfast room. The other side of the room is the dining room. A kitchen, three bedrooms and baths complete the house.

It consists of almost two acres, one-half of it in woodland. And it is here she loves to walk. For once you are in her woods there is no sight or sound of human habitation. You are alone with the birds and the insects and little wild animals and the wind that moves in the trees.

It will be January before she completes the movie 'Joan of Lorraine.' Then, after a couple of months' rest, she will go to the London studios to play a dipsomanic in "Under Capricorn," with that master of thrills and chills, Alfred Hitchcock, directing. Whether it will be the stage again after that or another movie depends upon the characters that are offered her.

"I like crazy characters," she says with quiet firmness, meaning she likes characters who are offbeat. Straight leading lady roles usually bore her. Always she is thinking of the parts she would like to play even when she gets to be sixty or seventy years old. For acting is her whole life. Without it I firmly believe she would shrivel up and die.

Thus she has come a long way. And thus my story which began with a lonely little girl ends with a great actress—and even more—a great and happy woman.

Which Twin has the Toni?
(and which had her permanent at the beauty shop?)

Miss Ella Wigren of Chicago, the lovely Toni twin, says, "No one at the party could tell our permanents apart—can you?" (See answer below.) "My Toni Home Permanent looked soft and lovely from the start! No wonder Lila says after this we'll be Toni twins."

For your date tonight... give yourself a lovely TONI Home Permanent

Easy? You would never dream it could be so easy to give yourself a permanent at home. Just three simple steps:

1. Roll your hair up on curlers (new Toni plastic curlers make it easier than ever). Dab on Toni Creme Lotion as you go.
2. Tie a turban round your head and do whatever you like for 2 to 3 hours.
3. Saturate each curl with Toni Neutralizer and rinse.

Wonderfully simple...and oh, what a beautiful wave! So soft, so smooth, so natural-looking. Exactly the amount of curl to suit yourself. Not too loose...not too tight...but just right. Easy to manage from the start because there's no stubborn frizzy stage with Toni.

Even if your hair is gray, dyed, bleached or baby-fine it will take a beautiful wave. For Toni waves any kind of hair that will take a permanent. See why every hour of the day another 1000 women use Toni. Try it today.

All leading drug, notions and cosmetic counters feature and recommend the Toni Home Permanent Kit.

Ella, the twin at the right above, has the Toni. Could you tell?

Easy as rolling your hair up on curlers—but the wave stays in for months.

De Luxe Kit with re-usable plastic curlers $2.00
Regular Kit with fiber curlers $1.25

(Continued from page 57) hit me with a shillelah for me to get the idea. The perennial favorite of “What’s the best thing to do for a code id the head” offered safer ground. We combed the inevitable surefire remedies and reached the inevitable conclusion that there isn’t a gosh-darned thing you can do about it, really, except carry a spare handkerchief and blow.

From the room digressed to me son Tim. I don’t recall Jimmy talking, being too much the gentleman to interrupt me. However, Mr. S. has a way with little people. He and Tim hit it off famously. In fact they made a late for golf. A bachelor might just as well get up and go to a movie.

I suppose you all know he plays the accordion and the part of the piano that’s in C. And that he lives in a small cozy little house with a very lovely housekeeper named Daisy. But did you know he’s a veritable Izaak Walton with rod and reel? His specialty is sword fish. It all started one morning when the tabloids announced a run of marlin just off the coast. This struck an adventurous chord in Mr. S. so he promptly called cronies Leland Hayward and Ward Bond, colophon to the boat and crew to acquire the necessary equipment.

He recalled that the proper marlin bait was the flying fish, and he went, too, an integral factor regarding these air-minded marlin tempters. It seems that shortly after a flying fish’s demise, the eyes fall out. The wily marlin, chances upon an eyeless flying fish, will say, “You’re too hard to digest with that hook in you,” and take it on the lam. So the even willer fishermen must sew the eyes in cautiously and with finesse in order to fox Mr. Marlin.

Then there’s the marlin himself, and Mr. Stewart entered a store and asked the clerk for some thread. The clerk solicitously asked, “For what use, sir?” and Mr. Stewart answered, “To sew some eyes in a flying fish.”

This sent the incredulous clerk in search of a larger clerk behind whom to hide. Eventually, however, our hero acquired the necessary material for sewing flying-fish eyes, the tackle, the pole, and lasso (you lasso marlin) and was ready. At 3:00 a.m. breakfast. At 4:30 a.m., Mr. Stewart and company boarded the boat, and cast off. At 4:40 a.m., Mr. Stewart completed sewing his first eye. At 4:41 a.m. Mr. Stewart became suddenly ill and remained in this unfisherman-like condition for the remainder of the day.

The story goes, if you would believe the old salts who recall the voyage, that nary a marlin was seen that day. Nor has the tall fisherman with the green complexion been seen round that port since.

There’s a moral to this story. Remember, “A stitch in time saves nine,” whereas a “stitch in a flying fish ruined Stewart.” But then the world is made up of give and take and if I hadn’t been given the assignment of interviewing Jimmy Stewart you might never have known what it takes to catch a swordfish. So you see, I did get a scoop after all. The End

We are sure Photoplay readers will be delighted to know that Susan will shortly start work in “Sign of the Ram”—her first picture since her accident nearly three years ago. She will play from her wheel chair—but don’t expect a good-goody role. She will surprise you.

Lots of luck, Susan!

QUICK CHANGE ARTIST

KARIN BOOTH is one gal who can dress in a hurry, and look as though she’s spent hours getting ready. She’d overslept, but twenty minutes after we’d phoned her to say we were downstairs, she joined us for breakfast looking so gorgeous that all male eyes focused on her. . . Knowing what a time the average femme has getting dressed, we asked how she did it. Laughingly, she replied that it’s just a matter of habit. She keeps her clothes constantly “in order,” so that she doesn’t have to make one big job of it. She doesn’t put off shampooing her hair, or manicuring her nails. Thus, at a moment’s notice, she can appear looking her loveliest.

TIPS ON POISE

KARIN confided that, like many actresses, she is inclined to worry about doing a scene well. So she tries not to be afraid, and to have confidence in her ability. You’ll have a chance to see how well this tall blue-eyed blonde’s idea works in her latest M-G-M picture, “The Unfinished Dance.” . . . Another tip on poise which she gave us, and which we believe you’ll find it worthwhile trying, is to think well of yourself, so others will, too. Karin claims if this attitude isn’t done to the point of conceit, it has a definite psychological, beautifying effect.

STAR ATTRACTIONS

If your eyes are your best feature, she suggests giving them star billing by subtle use of eye make-up. And if you have lovely teeth, experiment until you find the most flattering lipstick shade. . . The new cream lipsticks, incidentally, are claimed to have greater indelibility, and of course there’s the liquid type, which requires a special remover. . . . Karin believes in her good luck, but “insures” it by folding new dollar bills once before spending them. Born June Frances Hoffman in Minneapolis, Minnesota, there must be a bit of Scotch in Karin Booth!

The only difference is that now when I come home from the studio, the first thing I do is stop and play with Alana for awhile. She isn’t actually jealous but she is sensitive, and I don’t think any child should ever be hurt. Currently I get loved all over the place by her when I come home, but she’s gradually taking an interest in the baby, and I know things will work out so that she’ll become proud of him. It will be hard for her to become proud of herself because she is bigger and older than he is. The other day she looked down at him and said, ‘Daddy, he can’t ride a horse yet, can he?’

Young David isn’t doing anything yet—except all those wonderful things that all miracle babies do at approximately six months. And David is the cutest, most beautiful baby, let his fond parents tell it. Alan and Sue go through the usual parental routine of insisting he looks like the other one of them, but to this reporter he looks most like Alan does, though his face is rounder than his sister’s. However, his eyes are exactly as blue and his hair as blond. He is a “long” baby meaning he will be tall, and notice, according to his doctor, he “has a lot of future.”

He was named for sentimental reasons.

“The first job that Sue ever got me—the first real break I ever had in pictures—was in ‘Rulers of the Sea,’” Alan explains. “Life was always lovely to me then. I was falling in love. I was getting my chance—and I was sent to Catalina on location, which meant I was going to eat regular for a change. But what I really wanted was that half a dollar. He knew that I didn’t have a dollar. He knew I didn’t have a dollar. He knew I didn’t have a dollar. He knew I didn’t have a dollar.”

Actually, he was one of the best-off guys in town. He had an amazing adventure, running shows, carnivals and stock companies. He was a jockey for Faye Kline, and he had been the first Tondeleyo of ‘White Cargo,’ which was the first of those first ‘wild women’ parts, but they had come to settle down in Hollywood. It was his wife or his name, or both, and he went to Catalina and became of all things, the serenata of the screen, Fay Holden.

Dave and Fay had exactly the kind of marriage to which I aspired for Sue and me. Our friendship grew. I got my Paramount contract. I got my Sue. As the years went by, we grew closer and closer together. Dave understood my problems and his advice was always the soundest I could get on any subject. He was one of the best, and when he died a couple of years ago I knew I had lost something from my life that I would never replace.

“Often, when we talked, I told him that if Sue and I ever had a son, he’d be called David. He was a quiet fellow. He didn’t say a lot, but I always knew, by the way he would always sound the way he went for it in a big way. If his name grows up to be half the man he was, that will be very much okay.”

Small as he is, you may be sure that David Kline has already changed everything. To be truthful about it, his parents don’t exactly know what to do about him. The Hollywood house is too small with him added to it. The ranch house, which Sue converted into a dwelling despite its having been born to be a garage, is barely big enough for three. So, I have discovered that everything costs too much.

However, four of the ranch horses worked in ‘Whispering Smith,’ along with David himself. Sue says, ‘I’m not the only poor innocent horses working,’ but Alan grins and says, ‘They are regularly. Why shouldn’t they work?’ If you really want to know how these horses are earned twenty dollars a day for a matter of three pictures, write on ‘Whispering Smith,’ which should buy them quite a few oats, wild or otherwise.

Alan says, ‘I’m fighting for security, which in my case means fighting for a kind of productions that will keep me at the top. Now with David, I want to do so many things for him and Lottie. The bond between me and Sue has never been broken. David adds to this.

“It’s a growing thing, the difference between romance and a real marriage. Sue and I have had both, that wonderful excitement between us, and now this thing is a bond and one of the things we have that will keep me at the top. Now with David, I want to do so many things for him and Lottie. The bond between me and Sue has never been broken, David adds to this.

“Actually I’ve done better business than I dared hope—especially Two Years Before the Mast’ and ‘Calcutta.’ I’d like to go even more romantic picture for a change, but those seem hard to land. So far as actual working conditions are concerned, I never enjoyed making any picture as much as ‘Big Haircut’ with Dottie Lamour. There is a girl in a million and after two days on a picture, you know why Crosby and Hope have fought to keep her with them.

Sue is still shopping for a bigger house for the family. David is still at the stage where he only requires the space of a bassinet. Kathleen can care for both him and Alana, but add another six months and that blissful state will be impossible.

Alan’s dream, meanwhile, remains as it was before David came. He wants to build up the ranch so that eventually it will be a resort spot, which he will run, and support the whole family thereby.

With this thought in mind, he has recently enlarged the swimming pool, and put in a great refrigerator and irrigation system. Sue grins at this long range planning and says, ‘Is this realized yet? Don’t forget we are going to make millions from Alasud.”

Alasud and Marijuana are their two horses who are now busily engaged in eating the finest oats over at Santa Anita. Marijuana nearly got them in trouble during the telephone strike, when they had to wire the man who was going to buy her. ‘Marijuana ready to be picked up at ranch.” Western Union asked lots of questions about that one.

But under all the kidding, Sue is just as serious about the future as Alan is. It seems impossible that it can hold anything but the loveliest things for them—but regardless, they know they will be together in it—and so how could it be anything but a most beautiful one.

Alan sums it up when you ask where he’s registered David for future education. ‘What college could possibly teach any boy more than dear old Paramount? ’ he asks.

What Should I Do?

Give her the emotional security of feeling that you have confidence in her, it may take time and enormous patience, but she will respond.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Almost three years ago I had polio and was confined to bed a year. I was so happy when I was able to come home in the spring. I had recovered quite a bit and was walking and riding well when I had a horrible accident: A horse fell on me and crushed my crippled leg.

I was taken south to visit relatives so I had a wonderful time. I had dates—the boys pushed my wheel chair to the swimming pool and once I was in the water I could outswim most of them.

I was overjoyed when I came home and the doctor told me to learn to walk again. A month afterward I started back to school on crutches.

You can imagine how I felt when I began to realize that I didn’t fit in with the kids I had known, no close girl friends, and I don’t rate any dates.

Finally I mentioned my plight to my singing teacher and she said, “You have such a beautiful voice that you should be thankful for it and not let anything make you unhappy. You will go far in this world—farther than anyone else I know.”

I should be grateful, but I can’t help being lonely. Tell me how to win the right kind of friends to ease my loneliness.

Estella C.

I think your singing teacher’s philosophy is excellent: If you have a talent, as apparently you have, devote your entire strength toward preparing yourself for a career. You have the spark and resourcefulness to bring fame and a happy life, to study your music and to bring unexpected happiness to others.

If there is a government hospital near your home, you should arrange to sing there each weekend, if your children’s hospital, encourage youngsters who are suffering, by your return to health.

The sure way to contentment is to concern oneself with the needs of others.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

In the February issue there was a letter from a girl signed “Jane U.” who was six feet tall, and who complained of having no boy friends. I am nineteen, six feet tall, and weigh about one hundred fifty pounds. I find that girls over 5’6” are best for me to dance with and have the best personalities. I understand that you aren’t running a lonely hearts club but I would appreciate it very much if you would ask this girl to write to me.

PFC C. G. Johnson, Jr.

Since “Jane U.” failed to supply an address, I am publishing your letter. I hope she will see it and write to you. I also received a very nice letter from PFC Henri Despies, 833 O.B.D. Co Ordinance School, AFC, Aberdeen, Maryland, who was eager to get in touch with “Jane U.”

PFC Despies is 6’2”, and is n’t-een. I hope all of you become pen pals.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I recently turned twenty-one. At all times I have striven to be a gentleman, but have found it doesn’t pay. The older generation teaches us to have good manners, and be civilized human beings.

Well, it seems the better manners a person has, the more quickly other guys take advantage of him. The girls just think he is a sad sack.

I was taught to respect womanhood, but I’ve noticed that the guys who howl and mail get the girls.

Your letter reminds me of an interesting anecdote told about the prize-fighter Corbett. He was walking through a hotel lobby one evening, a bumptious, fuming bantam collided with him. Instead of apologizing, the man in error yelled at the pugilist, blaming him for the accident. Mr. Corbett just bowed and begged pardon. A friend with Corbett said, “Why didn’t you tell the little fool off?”

“I can afford to be polite,” said Corbett, “I have the money to back it up.”

You might remember that hereafter, as for the “guys who hotel and mail” getting the girls, it depends upon what kind of girls you have in mind. Every delivery of mail that I receive contains letters from girls eager to be popular without having to submit to mailing.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Could you please give me a list of linens that a girl planning to marry in the fall, should have for her new home? I’ve looked high and low in books for sensible advice. A list of etiquette books give a list that sounds like a banquet at Buckingham Palace and simply scares me to death.

Forsythia M.

I believe in starting married life with minimum essentials. Styles in table linens change almost as frequently as styles in clothing. A few years ago no one owned such a boon as a set of plastic place mats.

Since you are moving into a home, rather than into an apartment, I assume that you will have two bedrooms. In this case you should have six sets of sheets and pillow slips, so that at all times two sets will be in the laundry, two on the beds, and two on the closet shelf.

You will be able to figure out your own towel requirements. In addition to family needs, you should have a dozen small guest towels.

As for table linens, I should think that six would be enough, including place mats of various types as well as linen cloths with napkins to match. There should be one or two festive cloth for large family affairs. You will also need about two dozen doilies.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

This is my first year in this town as we just moved here. Almost at once I made friends with a girl and she introduced me to her friends. At midterms I was voted most popular girl in the school.

This honor caused me plenty of trouble, because my girl friend who had introduced me around had won “Most Popular” for the past three years. She didn’t say very much, but I knew that she was terribly disappointed.

The next thing I knew, a boy I had liked very much stopped asking me for dates. Then one of the girls gave a party and for the first time I wasn’t included. A few days later, another party was given, and once again I wasn’t invited.

Finally a committee from our gang made a diary of me, and explored that my “girl friend” had told everyone that my father was a drunkard, and that he came home from work every day and beat up my mother and me. She had said that I was very brave—imagined—to put up with it, and that our life was terrible.

I said it wasn’t true; but she had thought of that and had told the kids that I would deny it. Now what can I do?

Dalyce G.

Apparently you haven’t discussed this problem with your mother. If you had I feel certain she would have hit instantly on the right solution, which is this:

Simply give a party in your own home—a big party. This needn’t be expensive as you could serve hot dogs and soda. In another you could go in the spirit of inviting the trouble-making girl.

During the evening, your father should appear and make himself agreeable. Let your guests see for themselves that your father is kind, clever, pleasant man who loves his family.

Once you have made your point, I think you should see as little as possible of your erstwhile friend. She strikes me as being the sort of person who could be voted Least Likely To Succeed, if she is going to persist in fabricating evil stories every time she loses a contest.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am seventeen and in high school. I go with a boy in my class and we have a wonderful time; except for one thing, I have a sister ten years old and she seems to think she should go everywhere I go. She is back up by my mother who says I can take my choices. Either take my sister along on dates, and to school dances, or I can stay at home.

A ten-year-old sister is a dreadful drag on a girl’s popularity. Luckily I’m sort of pretty you never have a date.

PLEASE, help me.

Adela S.

The relation between two sisters is usually determined by the wisdom of their mother. To have a sister can be a blessed gift or the source of lifetime bitterness. Your mother should realize that. In the first place, a child of ten should be in bed by eight o’clock. In the second place, no child of ten should be allowed to attend movies on school nights, and certainly there is no reason for her accompanying you to high school social functions. By insisting you accept your sister's presence at all times, your mother is building up resentment between the two of you.

I do hope that this letter, when shown to your mother, may prove effective.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Ten months ago I married a widower. His wife had died of a heart attack while he was in the Marine Corps, leaving him with a baby son.

I should really be very happy. I have a husband who loves me dearly and whom I love with all my heart, a nice home, good health, my own car, and a cute little son.

But—I am jealous of my husband's son and vice versa. The boy was two years old when his mother died. He is so spoiled now, that he won't even sleep alone. He insisted on sleeping with us ever since we have been married.

I get up at five each morning to prepare Frank's breakfast, so the baby gets up too. He can hardly hold his eyes open, but he follows his daddy everywhere and is cross the rest of the day.

Twice we have hired "sitters" to stay with the boy so we could have an evening out. He cried and carried on so we had to dismiss the sitter and stay home.

I have tried to be good (I have a stepmother whom I love), but it's hopeless. If he sees a toy in a store he wants, but can't have, he cries, hits and kicks me and even throws things at me afterward.

I have said nothing to my husband about the boy's behavior for fear it would cause trouble in our marriage. Could you please give me some help?

(Mrs.) J. B. M.

It is natural for your husband to be devoted to his son, but he should be wise enough to see that his attitude towards the boy will eventually make both of you complete slaves of a spoiled child.

First of all, the child should be sold the idea of sleeping in a room alone. Any physician will assure you that the worst possible thing in the world for both parents and child is the arrangement you have described. The way to sell him the idea is to take him with you to the house of friends whose children have their own rooms. Then you can say, "Isn't Bobby lucky to have his own bed in his own room?" Give the impression that there is something superior and desirable in having his private quarters. He'll catch on and demand his own bedroom.

You might try the same motivation in regard to the sitter. Tell him about other children who stay at home with nursemaids while their parents are away. If he doesn't take kindly to suggestion, simply leave him with a sitter and walk out. The boy must learn cooperation now, or he will certainly become a problem child.

Buy some good books on child psychology and read them with your son. Show him that you are interested in the welfare of your son, and in building a satisfactory life for yourselves.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I saw "The Secret Heart" twice and fell in love with the theme song. Could you please tell me what the name of the melody is and whether it has been recorded?

Bonny B.

The melody is "La Plus Que Lent" by Debussy, and it has been recorded by a number of different pianists.

Accidentally Yours

Because when the girls who squeal young men into fame saw and heard Peter's number, "Taint Right to Love You Like I Do," at the sneak preview of "It Happened in Brooklyn," they screamed, "Taint Right To Neglect You." For a few minutes they even forgot Frankie Boy and carried on fit to kill for Mr. Lawford. Now, he's a star.

And all because Peter accidentally heard some music on Hollywood Boulevard. What would have happened to Peter and his career if instead of boogie woogie, the someone in that record shop had played the "Pastoral Symphony" by Beethoven?

But that's the way it's always been with Peter. Accidents of the moment have always changed the course of his career. He is accidentally yours!

It was accident that pushed him into British pictures when he was seven, an accident that brought him to California, an accident that kept him here.

And there is only one thing in Pete's life that will not happen accidentally. And that is his marriage. On that subject, his ideas are almost too definite.

"In the first place," says Pete, "I won't marry till I'm thirty." And that's surprising because he has been linked romantically with most Hollywood glamour gals.

Time was when Lana Turner and Pete were the handsomest twosome in Hollywood. "Lana's a girl to have a million laughs with," admits Mr. Lawford. "But—" The "but" means that they did not ever consider the less funny business of marriage. Before Lana there was Judy Garland. And now if it's Marilyn Maxwell, it's Audrey Totter, or Marie Winsor.

"I've never been in love," says Pete. He has a definite dream about the type of girl he will fall in love with and marry.

I WANT someone soignee, smart, chic. This you don't find in a girl less than twenty-eight years old, and by that time they're usually married—to someone else. The most attractive girls in this town are married," sums up the choosy star.

Here are some "musts" for Pete's wife.

"One, she must be a lady. I don't care if she's in pictures or not. Two, she must have a sense of humor, that's imperative. Three, not a social climber. Leaks will help, but she doesn't have to be a raging beauty. She must have poise. She must know how to dress—if she doesn't know this when we marry, she'll never know it. She must never be loud or raucous. Or over-ambitious. Hollywood is full of over-ambitious girls—they're around every corner. And phony girls. The woods here are full of phonies."

The girl will probably be a New Yorker, too. "I think New York has the most attractive girls in the world." Pete should know because he's been around the world several times.

In 1934 he stopped off in California for the first time, with his parents. They fell in love with the Golden State. And remembered it later.

Pete's father was a Lieutenant General in the first World War. Pete, who will be twenty-four, September 7th, was born in England. In the normal course of events, he would have entered Sandhurst and the Army.

It's not the same thing at all—bridled Mother. Look. This is the only face I have—and I intend to take care of it. With a soft tissue. A Kleenex Tissue. Good heavens—how many times do I have to tell you that Kleenex isn't another name for tissues?

I've got my NOSE to think of! blurted Joe. Talk about a raw deal! Jeeps—all day I've been quietly dying for some dreamy, soft Kleenex for these sniffles. And what happens? Smarty-pants, here, hands me ordinary tissues—when my nose knows there's no other tissue just like heavenly Kleenex!

Your Mother's right—for once! Pop chimed in. Kleenex is different. Take this box. Does it say Kleenex? No! Does it serve up tissues one at a time—so you don't have to fumble for 'em? No! So? Before you mistake other tissues for Kleenex—think twice, son!

I'll learn you! winked Uncle Joe. Hold this gen-u-ine Kleenex Tissue to a light. See any lumps, or weak spots? Never. You see Kleenex quality come smilin' through—always the same—so you can bet Kleenex is plenty soft. And husky! Your eyes tell you there is only one Kleenex.

Now I know...There is only one KLEENEX*

AMERICA'S FAVORITE TISSUE

"My mother was in politics with Lord Beaverbrook and Sir Thomas Paulson," says Pete, "and Sir Thomas had interests at Elstree. For a treat—I was seven at the time—I was taken to a studio to see how pictures are made." Monty Banks, at that moment was looking for a little boy to play an important part in "Poor Old Bill." "You're it," Banks shrieked jubilantly when he saw Pete. There was parental opposition. But Pete begged, "Just this once!" And that was the first of six pictures that young Lawford made in England.

"I was in France with my father in 1937," he continues, "And I was playing with some kids when I tripped and fell through a window, and almost lost my arm." Pete still carries the scar on his left hand. It was this injury that kept him out of the service during the war.

It took a long time for the boy to recover from the shock and loss of blood, and his doctors said the best thing would be for him to spend the winter in a warm climate. "Like California," said Pete with finality. And that's where they came, always of course with the idea of returning to Europe. And it wasn't long before Peter had "accidentally" landed a part in "Lord Jeff."

But then Hitler marched into Poland! The Lawfords, who had booked passage on the Rex, cancelled and went to Florida.

There's another side of Peter Lawford beside the fun and exuberance you see. He is a very good son. With their funds from England cut off, it was up to Pete, he felt, to support the two people who had lavished everything they had on him. The way was long and hard before he finally landed the part of Irene Dunne's son in "The White Caps of Dover," followed by "Two Sisters from Boston" and "Cluny Brown." It was realizing his great ambition—a house of their own for the two people he loves best—his parents.

And it's quite a house—small, but very fancy. Pete bought it last October. There are two bedrooms, a den, a living room or 'drawing room' as Pete calls it, on one acre of land in Brentwood.

Pete designed the color scheme himself—gray and maroon striped wallpaper in his bedroom with a gray leather headboard on his bed. The way he bought the bed was also an accident.

Pete saw and ordered the magnificent bed in a Chicago shop during a wait between trains. "First they sent me the headboard. Then three months later I received the box springs and mattress, but no legs! It took me six months to put the bed together." Now that it is all set up, the oversized double is a beautiful sight for tired eyes.

Most of the lamps in the house came from New York. In the living room the lamps are maroon and gray, and the long-haired rug is gray. It's all very modern, in keeping with the son of the house.

Maybe that's why the house-keepers are hen to him. He's modern and new, and their own generation. They understand him, and he has a pretty clear idea of what makes them tick.

Pete has changed—even in the comparatively short time that he has been a movie star. "At one time," he says, "my chief ambition was to own a Dunhill gold cigarette lighter." He shows me the gold badge of success in Hollywood and radio—you'd know what I mean if you've read "The Hucksters"—every self-respecting executive and star of radio and screen must have a gold lighter! "Now I don't want to be a millionaire, I just want enough money so I don't have to cut corners."

This should be a cinch for Pete because he is sure to get a new contract at Metro after the release of "Good News," his recent co-starring stint with June Allyson. And to give you an idea of his new importance, for three months they held Esther Williams's picture, "On an Island with You," until Pete was available.

But a bigger change in Pete is his way of living. He used to live in night clubs. "Now," he tells me, "I'd rather go to people's houses. Every Saturday I go to the Gene Kellys'. And one of my great friends is Frank Sinatra. I may not see him often, but I know that if I needed help, Frank would be the first I'd turn to."

Pete used to go around a lot with Van Johnson, before he married Evie Wynn. Now he doesn't see too much of Van—no one does except Evie. Keenan Wynn is Pete's closest friend. He helped Pete with his early pictures at Metro—and still does.

Pete's wardrobe deserves a chapter to itself. He has to have a lot of clothes for his pictures in which he is usually cast as a well-dressed man-about-town. It's a miracle how he gets them all into his small home. "I love clothes," says Pete. He thinks Cary Grant is the best-dressed actor in Hollywood. In fact, he's Pete's idol. "He has everything—charm, he knows how to wear clothes and he's a great actor."

In spite of his wardrobe, and swanky new red car, Pete is careful with his money. A saleswoman once tried to get Pete to buy some hand-knit socks. "How much are they?" he asked, examining them carefully. "Five dollars a pair," she told him. "I get mine for eighty-nine cents," said Pete triumphantly. There was no sale.

Pete has two failings. He hates to get up in the morning, and he's always late for appointments. "But it's never my fault when I'm late," apologizes Peter. "It's always an accident."

Sure, it's always an accident, but just as long as these accidents keep Pete in Hollywood, that's all right.

to see her in the smile on her lips as she met the applause that greeted her. Here, June felt intuitively, was no child inured to defeat. This girl was a thoroughbred and she knew it.

June’s mind flashed back to something the girl had said in the theater lobby. “What do you want more than anything else?” a newshound had asked.

“I want to win so that I can come back someday to this same theater and tell all these guys how much I love them,” the girl replied.

June had carried the words onto the stage with her and now they were beating again through her mind. “She’s sure she’s going to win,” June thought. “She thinks she’s prettier than me, prettier than Shirley Temple, prettier than anybody. Well, she just isn’t!” But even as these brave words were printing themselves indelibly on her mind June realized that the little dark girl was meeting her test like a trouper. Her sense of timing was professional, her young voice was a bar of music.

For the first time in the eight crowded years of her life June knew fear, a dark numbing thing which crawled up from somewhere inside her. Her hands were trembling and her mouth grew dry and cottony. She tried to swallow and couldn’t.

And then June remembered something her mother had said that same morning:
“Darling, do your best to win, but if you don’t, just remember that some of the finest actresses in the world are great because they had the courage to overcome failure.” June repeated these words to her-sel—and in that moment grew calm. She scarcely heard the master of ceremonies announcing to the audience that June Stovenour would now present her interpretations of Mae West, Greta Garbo, Katharine Hepburn and Helen Hayes.

The spotlight found her as she crossed the stage and the opening lines of her script, the lines which her mother had herself written for her, began to shape themselves in her mind.

Down in the orchestra seats Hal Roach had gazed at each of the contestants with jaundiced eyes. He had seen too many stage-struck juveniles. The world seemed to be populated entirely by precocious youngsters and gushing mothers. His mind had grown numb during this quiet, sponsored by Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, for a child star who could divert at least a ray of the lambent light that was currently beating about the tiny form of mop-jet Shirley Temple. So Mr. Roach and Mr.
Stewart had been sent forth on a motor tour of the country beating the hedgerows for some child who might share just a little of the glory being heaped upon the curly head of the fabulous Shirley.

Now Mr. Roach was nearing the end of his journey. Thus far the results had not been encouraging. That little brunette might just possibly do. Certainly she had been miles in front of the others. Just one more remained. After that he would go back and talk to the child’s mother. He sighed. There must be some way of making a living which did not include talking to ambitious mothers. He dozed.

Suddenly he felt a hand shaking his arm. “Get a load of this new kid,” Stewart whispered. “She’s a ball of fire. Boy, maybe this is it. Wake up, man, and watch this little blond kid do Hepburn. She’s layin’ ‘em in the aisles.”

Hal Roach straightened in his seat.

dance. Oh, she thought wearily, there had been too many contests, even though she had won them all—too many medals and gold cups, and not enough fun playing with other kids of her own age.

She looked again at the dark little girl beside her. Suddenly, her spirits rose. In that instant she knew that this contest would end exactly as the others had ended because this was the greatest prize she had ever striven for—a screen test and the opportunity to go to Hollywood, the heaven which made all other promised heavens seem drab by comparison. Hollywood, for June, was more than a land of make-believe; it was reality itself, the epitome of desire. Even now among those who had crowded into the theater to witness this final contest, she could see the two men who had inspired this occasion. One was a Mr. Hal Roach and the other was Russell Stewart, a cameraman for M-G-M.

The appealing child in the pink organdie dress had finished her routine, and turned again to her chair amid a mild flutter of applause. “She has lost,” June thought, “and she knows she has lost.” She was conscious of a poignant sense of pity for the girl and, watching her closely, she could see the tears shimmering in her brown eyes. “No she’ll have to go home,” June was whispering to herself, “and all the kinds will say: ‘Yah, yah, yah! You thought you were so smart and you didn’t win.’

But when you are very young the mind does not retain the feeling of tragedy and abruptly June’s thoughts were jerked back to the vital moments which lay just ahead.
The dark girl was rising from her chair.
There was assurance in her young strolc an awareness of the people who had come

BORDERLINE ANEMIA is no help to a happy marriage!

Thousands who are tired and pale may find renewed energy—restore healthy good looks—with Ironized Yeast Tablets

Do everyday tasks exhaust your energy and leave you fatigued and irritable? Do you look older than your years? Is your color poor? These signs often come from a blood condition. You may have a Borderline Anemia, resulting from a ferro-nutritional deficiency of the blood.

The red cells in your blood may be below-par in color and size—they may be too weak to transmit full energy to your body. Results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have this Borderline Anemia.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

And if this common blood condition is robbing you of your usual color and energy, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells. Of course, continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high" to help restore your natural color! Take them so you can enjoy life again!

How Beautiful Is Your Mind?

(Continued from page 63) attribute a girl can have," Joan tells me, "is not beauty of face and figure, but the beauty that comes from within. And I can prove it. If you look at nearly all the famous women in history—past or present—you can prove it too. For the truth is that most 'famous beauties' of history weren't beautiful at all. They've gone down in the minds of generations as lovely women because they gave the illusion of loveliness by their charm, poise, intelligence and personality. And because they were truly interested in other people, and in the affairs of the world. Take a look at their pictures—and then think of what they achieved."

Joan started me thinking, all right—and I came up with some currently famous women who give the impression of beauty because of their mental outlook. See if you agree with me. I think that Mrs. Wendell Willkie is a fine example; so are Gertrude Lawrence and Helen Hayes; and so are many moving picture actresses who are not actually beautiful—although we firmly believe them to be. By the power of their personalities they create the aura of beauty.

All right. Now let's get down to exact Levitt figures on how to acquire this kind of beauty—the only lasting kind.

"First on my list is to supplement the elementary education most of us get in high school. by taking college courses," says Joan. "I want to broaden my knowledge of people and customs—with airplane and radio and the world has become so small that understanding of other countries is absolutely essential. And I want to know how to take my place as an intelligent member of society."

Joan is taking several courses at a university near her home. She also keeps her mind brushed up by an easy home schedule—she reads at least one newspaper thoroughly every day, one news magazine every week, one home and one fashion magazine every month. She attends at least one lecture, concert, or play every month. This makes Joan able to take her part in any conversation.

"Second on my list is a healthy body, which will automatically reflect a happy frame of mind," Joan went on. "For the body should not be forgotten—it should be the background of the mind. I keep my body in tune by getting exercise outdoors, where the rest of me is also in tune. There is something about such essentials as earth, sky, and sun, that makes me realize how really unimportant we are as individuals in the huge scope of things."

Joan spends hours in her garden, working with trowel and soil. She also takes long rides on her horse—meanwhile learning a great deal about the California countryside she rides through. She has learned to identify all the trees and bushes, all the birds that fly across her path, and all the little animals around her. Often, too, she goes off on long walks with her dog Sandy—which brings her to another point.

"I think that caring for some small animal, feeding it and training it, gives you a sense of responsibility that is of great use in the world—where you have to take your responsible place with other people."

Another way that Joan has learned responsibility and developed a sense of values is to take on the task of bookkeeping for her household and for her own needs. Still another is cooking on the cook's night out—regardless of distracting offers of dates.

Now to the fourth requisite:

"Laughter, a real sense of the ridiculous, is a wonderful quality for happy living... a sense of humor, if you want to call it that,” said Joan. (A man once told me, “No woman is truly attractive without the light touch.”) But Joan doesn’t mean the kind of laughter that hurts someone else. She doesn’t mean cruel practical jokes.

“T’ll give you an example of a cruel joke,” Joan went on, “I once knew a man who wrote poetry and was very proud of his poems. They may not have been very good, but he thought so and he liked to read them aloud to his friends. A big group of his friends thought up a practical joke to play on him—they all gathered and asked him to read aloud a collection of his works. He did so, and as he did, one by one the members of his audience slipped away silently until as he finished, only two were left. They thought it was a very funny 'rib' and they laughed themselves sick over his humiliation. But I wanted to cry when I heard it.

“But there are affectionate, practical jokes that are pure fun and hurt nobody. I’ll give you an example of that too. Fred Astaire and Hermes Pan pulled this one on Ginger Rogers years ago, when Fred and Ginger were starring together in their famous dancing pictures. One day, Fred and Hermes asked Ginger to come to a projection room and see the rushes on the picture they were making. So off the three of them went to see the film—all carefully doctored ahead of time. Every time Ginger swayed with the music, there was a sharp ripping sound as if she’d torn her clothes. When she leaped into the air and came to the floor again, the sound effects resembled an explosion. When she bent her knees there was a terrible creaking sound as if her joints were ninety years old.

“Ginger watched for a few moments of stunned disbelief. Then she burst out laughing, and together with Fred and Hermes simply loved the whole gag. That’s what I call an affectionate, kindly type of practical joke.”

NOW let’s stop a moment and sum up Joan’s formula so far, before going on to the last—and most important—requisite. An informed mind, a healthy body, dependability, and a sense of laughter will take any woman a long way toward her goal. She will be almost beautiful to the beholder.

But here’s the fourth and final essential that assures her beauty without any question. It’s the real secret—and it’s Joan’s basis of operation.

“I try to have understanding love for everyone around me—for my family, friends, and eventually I hope I’ll have it for the man I’ll marry,” says Joan.

We all know women who are generously loving in their attitude toward everyone they meet, and are therefore deeply loved in return—although they have little more to offer the world then love. What more is there, when you think of it? Everyone is lonely and a little uncertain. Everyone is attracted toward kindness and understanding.

“No matter how beautiful your face may be in youth,” says Joan, “time goes on. And as it goes, it writes a story on your face—the story of your character. Beauty of spirit is written on the faces of such people as Lincoln and Florence Nightingale—the faces of people who loved mankind. Whatever your spiritual story is, never forget that it too will be written on your face as you grow older.

“How beautiful is your mind? I think it can be as beautiful as your capacity for love.” And that is Joan’s creed. I believe it to be as true as life itself. Make your mind beautiful, and you will have beauty.

The End
"I'd Marry Him All Over Again!"

(Continued from page 33) Day to the deposed baseball king has nothing to do with my story. This is an interview with Laraine Day, the woman, and is not a discussion of the moral aspect of the elopement. That has all been thrashed out in the newspapers.

I am interested in Laraine Day as an actress and as a human being. For she is as sweet and fine a girl as has ever sought and achieved a career in Hollywood. It is little short of ironic that just a year ago Laraine Day was neither seen in fancy drinks nor makes with wisecracks, was considered dull copy by Hollywood interviewers.

I said, "Laraine, if you had known what misery you would have to endure—would you still have married Leo, with whom you have had nothing but trouble?"

The import of my sudden question did not seem to reach her at first. She looked so young leaning back against the divan in my living room, the dirndl type dress she wore and the Mexican costume jewelry making her seem even more like a child. It was as though my question had to seep through the depths of her feeling before she could answer. Then she opened her eyes wide and looked at me.

"Oh, there can't be any question about that!" she cried, her voice quivering with excitement and protest. "I love him. That's all the answer there is. My husband is the most wonderful man I have ever known. He has had to be treated as I have just because he loves me."

Her words were tumbling over each other now. "I know very well he would never have been asked to leave the Brooklyn ball team that was his very life if we hadn't had all this public discussion of our marriage and elopement!"

The sobs were so close to the surface that she had to bite at her under lip nervously to hold them back.

"No matter what the price I would not have missed the love I have found with this fine man, this wonderful man who is my husband, for anything in the world!"

"I wish everyone could know him as I do—his consideration and tenderness. If I hadn't realized his love every minute, I could not have stood all the humiliation of this trial."

"Why wasn't he at my side in the courtroom—as that lawyer kept pouting and pouting? Because my attorney, Judge Pach, had to have me in court with me. It wasn't Leo's case. It was a trial to ascertain whether or not my divorce from Ray Hendricks was to be thrown out of court because of collusion."

"Right at this unhappy time, the story broke that Leo had caught a plane back to New York. How untrue that was! If anyone had taken the trouble to investigate, he would have discovered that my husband was here—here at my side. I felt like standing up in court and crying it out to the world. Lawyers can say what they want to in court, but you can only answer direct questions put to you."

"Believe me, every day of this trial has been an Inquisition to both of us. If I tried to restrain myself and keep my emotions in check, I was 'hard and unconcerned.' If I cried and gave way to my feelings, I was 'acting.' I couldn't have stood any of it if I hadn't known Leo was waiting for me."

"He was so completely understanding. Do you know that when we met each other for the first time once mentioned what I had gone through until I was ready to talk about it? I would just realize he was there and with me—and then I could pour it all out in torrents."

SHE seemed calmer when she added, "One thing—I don't see how anything more can possibly happen to us."

She nervously clasped and unclasped her hands. "No matter what anyone else thinks, I believe in my heart that I am married to Leo Durocher and that he is married to me. If our Mexican marriage isn't legal, think how many other marriages come under the same category. But I hate to even mention that. I couldn't bear to have anyone else go through the agony Leo and I have endured these past few months."

"The thing that is so bitter to me is that Leo has been accused of breaking up my home. You know how untrue that is. You know I wasn't happy with Ray Hendricks."

"You knew I was miserable even when I didn't tell you the true state of affairs. Remember how often you telephoned me to ask if it were true I was leaving Ray? Then I never talked! At that time, I thought there wasn't any more happiness for me, except what I could find with my adopted children. They really filled my life—I loved and wanted them so much. Even now I can stand the blows that come to Leo and me—if only the children aren't involved. Yes—they have even tried to take my babies away from me."

Laraine went on to tell how a certain radio commentator had written the home where she obtained the two little girls and the baby boy and said she was unfit to have them. "Every American demands that these children be taken away from Laraine Day," is what he wrote.

"The letter came back to me," she said tersely. "The head of the institution knew. She has been thoroughly investigated before she let me have the children in the first place and she knew my character. Leo wants to adopt my children," she went on, and whether I was ever married—or at least, until all this blackness has cleared away. If we could only live in California, Leo and the children and I, in my beautiful home—that's all the happiness we ask for."

All conversational roads lead straight back to Durocher where Laraine is concerned as I fully realized by now. No man ever had such a raise sung to him. To the girl who loves him so much he is a man standing friendless in a world of enemies.

"They are determined that whatever he does is wrong," she said definitely. "When we were in Havana we kept mostly to ourselves so no one could accuse him of associating with Lucky Luciano, who was very respectable and a very proper person. As a result we were criticized because I didn't appear with him at the ballpark. When we finally agreed to pose for a few publicity pictures, there was the criticism that he was a factor in our lives."

"One thing about my husband," said Laraine (she always carefully referred to him as 'my husband'), "is that all his life he has been the right thing. Whatever he has done has been in every newspaper—so what more is there to say?"

I don't know Leo Durocher personally. But when a woman loves a man as much as Laraine Day should be grateful to the end of his life. Such love doesn't come along every day. Whether it's right or wrong is not for me to say. I only know that he who is known and adored and loved in Hollywood, married and won one of the prettiest and finest girls in our entire industry.

Again the tears were welling up in her eyes as she said, "My life was so miserable and difficult and Day should be grateful to the end of his life. Such love doesn't come along every day. Whether it's right or wrong is not for me to say. I only know that he who is known and adored and loved in Hollywood, married and won one of the prettiest and finest girls in our entire industry.

And there are the words of a girl who has been accused (legally) of flaunting the code of decency and convention! My heart went out to her and I am neither a girl nor a shamer of desire.

Because of the strong moral scruples she has always had and always lived by in Hollywood, I suppose she must have thought she had shocked me in what she had just said, for she went on: "I had to come to you and tell you everything—because you have always been kind to me and understanding. I wanted you to know some of the reasons why this horrible nightmare that has been like a frightening dream hanging over our heads."

"I'm glad you did, Laraine," I answered, "because in understanding there is tolerance. We give each other trial, and work out as best as possible—for they are hers—not mine. And, in passing on what she had to say, I can only hope that you will second my wish that her great loyalty and love will be rewarded and will eventually lead to the happiness she prays for."

Anne Jeffreys, who hummed little tunes before she could talk, was educated for the opera. When she sang Mimi in "La Boheme" and Nedda in "Pagliacci" the Metropolitan seemed just around the corner. Then she and her mother went to California for a short vacation—and Anne became an RKO star! Her latest pictures are "Trail Street" and "Riff Raff"

The newest full-skirt-and-tiny-waist look makes this Jonathan Logan print dotted Swiss the perfect answer to that mid-summer prayer for something at once smart and cool to wear. Sizes 9-15. Side View of the Fashion Sitting

ANNE JEFFREYS

By Rena Firth

A LL was quiet on the photographic front when Anne Jeffreys arrived at the Ben Studio for her Photoplay Fashion sitting. The two canine cuties scheduled to pose with her had not yet arrived.

Blonde and statuesque, Anne stands 5'5" in her stocking feet, weighs 120 pounds and has fascinating, twinkling eyes, very blue. She arrived at the studio wearing a fuschia-red suede topcoat over a figure-molding green crepe dress. Her shoes were green suede with straps that tied in soft bows in front. Her jewelry was heavy gold oddly-cut earrings and bracelets—the kind that only tall girls like Anne should wear, actually! Her hair was classically simple—parted in the center and drawn back in soft waves, caught up with gold-topped combs and worn in a cluster of soft curls at the nape of the neck.

Anne recently played the role of the daughter, Rose, in the Broadway musical stage production "Street Scene." It was pretty strenuous stuff—strenuous enough to cause her to decide she preferred Hollywood to the stage, definitely.

By the time Anne had gotten into the black and white print dress with its stunning topcoat of white butcher linen, the dogs had arrived. And the fun began! Ginger, the cocker puppy, was perfectly amiable. He just naturally liked blondes. But Ditto, the Dalmatian, possessing no yen for the spotlight, vigorously demonstrated his desire for solitude and contemplation of his own spots!

Anne was at home with both dogs. But she's really a cat-lover. In the specially built cattery outside her house in California she has eight white Persians. They're all named after opera characters, Rudolfo, Butterfly, Musetta, Mimi, Violetta, Pinkerton, La Tosca and Manon. Manon has green eyes, the others have blue. Very much at home among this aristocratic brood is a part Siamese, part alley cat, named Felix.

When the sitting was over and the dogs had been returned to their kennels, we asked Anne to name her favorite flower. It was our notion she deserved orchids. She breathed a little sigh. "Dogwood!" she said. "Dogwood!"
Here’s a wonderful new addition to your beloved flats—a leather cuff over the vamp. This shoe, designed by Junior Deb, can be had in any color suede with matching or contrasting leather trim. This new styling, you’ll find, does wonders toward making your foot look smaller. These shoes come in sizes 4 to 9—all widths—and are around $8.00.

We thought you might like to know a little more about the print dress under the white linen coat that we photographed on Anne Jeffreys this month. There’s a self-tie bow at the neck, short cool sleeves, buttons to the waist and soft fullness in the skirt. The sheer fabric is light as a thistle and you’ll be well dressed in this print anytime—any place—with or without the coat.

This new camera is called “Winpro 35”. It’s a 35mm and is designed for black-and-white or color photography. The handstrap is nylon, it’s simple to use, and the price is an answer to an amateur’s prayer. $10.95 tax included. Look pretty, please.

Accessories mean so much to any costume. Here are two simple rules to follow... First, if your suit or dress is a solid color you will want your hat and gloves to be a pair. Say white hat and gloves or high shades that blend with your costume. Your leather accessories will match each other and that is simple now as most shoe departments will show you a matching handbag. Second, always remember if there are predominating colors in your costume it is not smart to wear colored accessories. Keep them in dark, white, or muted shades.

(Continued from page 67) on him, Rory was saying impatiently, "But that isn't anything! I still have to get my pilot's license—and that takes more time!"

It was Rory Calhoun in his hat. Everything about this power-built lad is quick. His smile, his likes—even his temper. About the only thing you can predict with any accuracy about him is that his next step will be unexpected and vigorous.

Your first glimpse of Rory inevitably makes you think of forests and the sea and this isn't strange. His father, James McCreery, was a seaman. He was on his way when Rory was nine months old. Rory was born in Hollywood but his school years were spent in San Jose, California, where he is remembered for his football exploits and the fact that he became a "Golden Gloves" boxer . . . fought fifteen bouts without losing a decision.

Along about then wanderlust overtook him and he went to work as a truck miner, truck driver and ranch hand, bringing to each job a tremendous enthusiasm and curiosity which made him resolve to be the best damned whatever—it was—he was-being-at-the-moment that the world had ever seen. He was busy learning to be the best forest fire fighter in the California Ranger Service when, on vacation, he came to visit his great gran'mother in Hollywood. A talent scout for the Sue Carol agency spotted him on a bridle path and persuaded him to try out in Hollywood. Right after that he was invited to a party at Sue's Friar Lata, a house where Henry Willson, a Selznick executive, saw him and took note of the fact that not a girl there could take her eyes off him. That did it; story soon was concentrating on becoming the best up-and-coming young actor in Hollywood!

He is six feet three and tapers neatly downward from tremendous shoulders. His hair is bronze-brown and his face is dark, with a pair of blazing blue-green eyes that light up like a Neon sign when he is amused or interested—or angry.

He has the ability to imbue everyone around him with his own enthusiasm. When he decided that he must learn to ice skate, it was no time at all until Selznick set up an ice rink. No amount of talk could influence Sands and his bride, the former Sue Allen, Chris Adams and any number of his friends were slithering about the ice, too, in earnest endeavor to learn curlicue and pirouettes, come bruises or abrasions.

He was indifferent about learning to rumba until he heard someone say, "Of course a big man can never be good at it. It goes somewhere below the belt." Rory, recalling that he had been considered phenomenally fast on his feet in the premiere ring, was off like a shot to the nearest dance instructor and now he is rated as one of the town's top ten or twelve and he in turn is taught by some celebrity expert. He is still concentrating on becoming the best up-and-coming young actor in Hollywood!

Rory's idiosyncrasies about clothes are becoming a legend. Not long ago a studio bigwig was showing some visiting notables around and was anxious to meet actors. Suddenly the host deplored what he afterward described as "a terrible apparition!" It was Rory, with a three-day beard and in his beloved dungarees and what the bigwig said was "the most incredible shirt yet!" He pretended not to see his rising young star and has complained bitterly since that day when they were no more visitors, Rory was all over the place looking simply too elegant.

Rory lives with his mother and stepfather, Mr. and Mrs. Durgin, in a modest house in the Valley with a deep back garden. Rory plans to give innumerable parties this summer.

The first party will be for Henry Willson's birthday and is said to be held out with enthusiastic plans. Henry has been forbidden to come near the place without phoning first, for fear he will stumble over evidences of some projected surprise.

Rory loves parties and delights in taking pretty girls to night clubs, especially if the

Is Hollywood Red?

(Continued from page 31) we have here can have no effect, or at most only an infinitesimal effect on the general result. Whether we have war with Russia, whether we declare the Communist Party a foreign agent, whether we extend the Greeco-Turkish policy to Persia and India and Korea and China, will not be decided in Hollywood. Some of these questions, by the best odds that can be calculated now, will not be decided in our lifetimes. But what can be decided in Hollywood, and not only in our lifetime but quick, is whether pictures are to be declared legally dead or not. For they can die. Other forms of entertainment have died, of grotesque and trivial causes, and when they died they stayed dead. And all that pictures need to turn up their toes is that they become the football of politics, as these have already become the football of do-gooders and sam-singers and soul-savers. They don't need to go sailing between the goal posts, sent there by the victorious boot of either side. This game doesn't have to be won and it doesn't have to be lost. All it needs is to go on, and as sure as God made little apples, when we look up, during one of the wrangles between officials of a long, dreary, and pointless tie, we shall find our customers have gone home.

ON BOTH sides, I think, even among the extremists, there are many who would like to see more famous made an "open" industry, at least within certain limits, so the conflict could suspend. The trouble is, though there might be desire for such an agreement, there is at present no means by which either side could make sure of the good faith of the other in carrying it out. For such are the reputations that conspiratorial activity has got for itself on the one hand, and narrow chauvinism on the other, that if the word of a Red is worth considerably less than a plucked dime, the word of an anti-Red as a polemic curiosity is worth considerably and unfortunately more. For some of the charges made by the Moving Picture Alliance for the Preservation of American Ideals, through its house organ Vigil, its close ally the Hollywood Register, and its friendly backers among the Los Angeles press, have to be seen to be believed, and have only to be read to be discredited. That the Reds dream silly dreams I don't want to say. But that they have a monopoly over the disservice now being done the picture business is indeed far from the truth. Among the MPA are some fine men and women, with solid records of achievement going back many years. But that any large number of them are noble Horatius, backed against the bridge, facing fearful odds for the ashes of their fathers and the temples of their gods, is, most unlikely. Actually, they suffer from the same diseases as afflict the rank and file of Reds. They are Johnny-come-latelies to the field, political amateurs, with not the zeal of the recent convert, and all of his ignorance, too, of the possible consequences of his zeal. And their "educational" campaign, designed to awaken all and sundry to the menace that besets our hallowed sound stages, happens also to be an advertising campaign, and of the very worst kind. It does awaken all and sundry, that is the trouble with it. And it convinces them that Hollywood is about five times as sinister a place as it really is. They are in the position of the man who gets up in church and asks all the brethren and sistern present to pray for his beloved wife, who now feels temptation a-threatening her. It may make for salvation but it'll hardly

NOTICE TO MITCHUM FANS!

Bob shows his colors in the September Photoplay Platter Patter

By Lester Gottlieb

A record eye-view of music, both classical and popular, with stress on the hits you'll be hearing in the movies

THE RED HOUSE: The complete musical score from this melodrama has been recorded by Capitol, with distinguished Miklos Rosza, who wrote the scores for "Spellbound," "Lost Weekend," "The Killers" and "Mac-Loc," directing the orchestra.

PERILS OF PAULINE: Betty Hutton follows up her original disk of the two major tunes from her new Paramount film, with a Capitol disk of a pair of other Frank Loesser melodies from this saga of the silent: "Sewing Machine" and the ballad, "I Wish I Didn't Love You So." In case you've forgotten, the earlier songs were "Poppa, Don't Preach to Me" and "Rumble, Rumble."

ROY ROGERS: The western singing star lassos "Dangerous Ground" and "I'm Restless" (Victor). But for more complete cowboy stuff try Vicky's new album by The Sons of The Pioneers, which includes "Tumbling Tumbleweeds" and songs from such horse operas as "Texas Stampede" and "Home in Oklahoma."

LOVE AND LEARN: The ballad from this comedy should warrant replaying. It's called "Would You Believe Me" and Skitch Henderson (Capitol), Sammy Kaye (Victor) and Claude Thornhill (Columbia) have waxed it.

WELCOME STRANGER: Bing himself has cut the two merry tunes fashioned by his favorite tunesmiths, Burke and Van Heusen, for Decca, but practically everyone else has grooved them too. Best of the lot, the way Art Money (M-G-M), Harry James (Columbia), Andy Russell (Capitol) play "As Long As I'm Dreaming" and Tex Beneke's Victor version of "My Heart Is a Hobo." Bing Crosby VARIETY GIRL: This musical has a lively tune called "Tallahassee" and Kate Smith (M-G-M) makes it sound much better than it really is.

SONG OF SCHIEHEREZADE: Universal's pretentious spectacle owes most of its popularity to the immortal Rimsy-Korsakov music. Skitch Henderson (Capitol) Steinways the title melody with a unique arrangement.

COPACABANA: UA's ode to a New York night club has a nice new tune, "Je Vous Aime." Andy Russell is first man on the turntables with it (Capitol).

IT HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN: The one and only Louis Armstrong picks out a tune from Sinatra's latest. It's called "I Believe" and you won't want to miss this version (Victor).

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: The churchly "Reformation Symphony" by Mendelssohn gets a rare recording by The London Philharmonic conducted by reliable Sir Thomas Beecham (Victor) . . . Brahms' Sonata in F Minor is played by the capable young pianist William Kapell and the violinist William Primrose in a new Victor album . . . The English composer Delius's Concerto for Violin and Orchestra is played by the Liverpool Philharmonic, with Alfred Sammons as violin soloist. Congratulations are in order to Columbia for bringing out this oft-neglected work . . . There's never enough of Tchaikovsky so Columbia has issued two new albums. One is "The Little Russian" Symphony, ably performed by The Minneapolis Symphony, with Dimitri Mitropoulos on the podium. The other is the great composer's Serenade in Major for Strings. The Philadelphia Orchestra, conducted by Eugene Ormandy, records this work in their usual masterly way . . . Schubert's ambitious, timeless Ninth gets a new and spirited interpretation by Bruno Walter and The New York Philharmonic (Columbia). Written in the last year of his short life, many consider it his greatest work.
Brief Reviews

JOHNNY O’CLOCK—Columbia: Dick Powell is the slick young Johnny who gets mixed up in the gambling business; Evadu Rees is his girl. The gangster business isn’t overcome. (May)

LATE GEORGE APLEY, THE—20th Century-Fox: Ronald Colman moves to Beacon Street in Boston and emerges unpennonionly as the famous Marquand hero. He’s hidebound by tradition though daughter Peggy Cummins and son Richard Ney do their best to shake him out of it. (May)

LOCKET, THE—RKO: Your eyes keep getting bigger and bigger watching what Laraine Day does. Robert Mitchum and Brian Aherne know all about her past, which has lots of events in it. (June)

MACOMBER AFFAIR, THE—Bosans-UA: Ernest Hemingway’s novel about a man, his wife and their hired hunter in deep Africa will give you plenty of turns. With Joan Bennett, Robert Preston, Gregory Peck. (May)

MY FAVORITE BRUNETTE—Paramount: Words and facial expressions by Bob Hope who falls all over himself running to aid Dorothy Lamour. He meets up with Peter Lorre and murder. (May)

FOOD MAN OUT—I, Arthur Rank: A pretty girl from England with James Mason playing the hunted head of an “organization” in Ireland. (May)

OTHER LOVE, THE—Enterprise-UA: Barbara Stanwyck’s the woman patient at a tuberculosis sanitarium run by doctor David Niven. She should stay and recover but instead she runs away to the Riviera gay life with handsome Richard Conte. (July)

PERILS OF PAULINE—Paramount: The old serial heroine Pauline is back again with Betty Hutton as Pearl White to give you some of the finest fun you’ve ever had. Billy De Wolfe, John Lund, William Demarest and Constance Collier give you a perfect picture of the old movie days. (July)

RAMROD—Enterprise-UA: Here’s another wicked lady—Veronica Lake—who makes spineless-headed heroes of the West weak in the head. Joel McCrea is the guy who doesn’t catch on until it’s almost too late that she’s just as soon murder as winkle. (June)

SEA OF GRASS, THE—MGM: Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn get emotional about life on the cattle range, with Melvyn Douglas, Robert Walker and Phyllis Thaxter. (July)

SHOCKING MISS PILGRIM, THE—20th Century-Fox: This had a big opportunity in a brand-new plot—a female “typewriter” who walks into a shady Boston office in 1874. It could have been a diverting comedy, but it peters out instead into a love diatribe between Betty Grable and head guy Dick Haymes. Fair enough, but could have been better. (June)

SIN OF HAROLD DIDDLEBOCK, THE—California-UA: Harold Lloyd comes back to make a silly picture about one Harold Diddlebock who gets off his routine track and ends up with a circus. Lots of nonsense that’s fun if you’re in the mood. (July)

SMASH-UP: THE STORY OF A WOMAN—Universal-International: Eva Hayard turns in a fine picture of an alcoholic. When time hangs heavy on her jellied fingers she takes to the bottle. With Marshall Hult, Lee Bowman. (May)

TARZAN AND THE HUNTRESS—RKO: Some hunters (one’s Patricia Morison) invade Johnny Weismuller’s jungle in search of zoo specimens, but they’re defeated before they ever start. (June)

TIME OUT OF MIND—Universal-International: The novel was a best-seller, but the film fell flat on its high-minded nose. Phyllis Calvert is good as the housekeeper’s daughter who tries to make a musician of Robert Hutton. (June)

TROUBLE WITH WOMEN, THE—Paramount: Teresa Wright and Ray Milland lend their talents to a film that’s just a time-passer. It has to do with a psychology professor who thinks women should be pushed around and a girl reporter who pushes him around instead. Brian Donlevy helps things. (June)

TWO MRS. CARROLLS, THE—Warners: Mr. Carroll is Humphrey Bogart and Mrs. is Barbara Stanwyck. They seem an ideal married couple until you and Barbara begin to find out what happened to the first Mrs. Carroll. (June)

WELCOME STRANGER—Paramount: Everyone takes it easy—Bing Crosby genially, Ray Milland’s Cupid and Joan Caulfield acts pretty, too. The plot lallygaggs pleasantly along the route of a city doctor’s sojourn in a Maine village. (June)

WOMAN ON THE BEACH, THE—RKO: Joan Bennett slinks along a deserted beach with Robert Ryan who has a bad case of war nerves. They’re made worse when he meets Joan’s blind brother Charles Bickford and gets mixed up in their morbid lives. (July)

YANK EE FAIR—Republic: You see only the back of the villain’s head until the end of the picture, but you know all along who murdered Joan Woodbury’s father. Too bad traveling pitcher Donald Douglas couldn’t have guessed too. (July)

(Continued from page 65) ever recognized in the movies officially. We were both thrilled to death. And Jean Pierre admitted that for that affair, he certainly would have to have tails.

"I will rent them in London. After all, I will have plenty of time. We're getting there two days ahead of time," said Pierre.

There was no use arguing with him, so I rushed off and had a special Paris gown designed. Let me tell you: It was champagne-colored satin, with an off-the-shoulder bodice which I wore with champagne-colored gloves and a gossamer champagne tulle scarf that fell to the floor in back and front. In my gold dots with Jimmy's shoes, I was all talk—arguing, playing cards, even dancing.

While I was arranging all this, Jean Pierre was doing what he loves best—seeing his hundreds of friends in Paris. And giving not a thought to his tails.

In London, with only forty-eight hours in which to rent them, I drove him out immediately to locate some. We went to every renting place in London in vain. Then just wasn't a single pair of tails that fitted him, nor gowns and heavily padded hips. I was sick with worry, but Jean Pierre was calm.

"Something will turn up, my love. Do not worry," he said. He was still saying that the night before the great event. We had gone to dinner at a smart London night club whose owner Johnny Mills (like everyone else in the world) was a friend of Jean Pierre's. Jean Pierre told him his problem.

"Tomorrow's the Command Performance, and my wife's all decked out like a movie-star—and I can't find any tails," he said.

Johnny Mills thought a moment. Then he suggested, "Well, look around the club tonight. When you see someone who looks about the right size, let me know.

You can guess the rest of this dizzy story! Yes, Jean Pierre picked out an austere-looking Englishman with a walrus moustache who looked about the right size and height, and told Johnny Mills.

"Just a minute," said Johnny. He spoke to Mr. Moustache, who listened in astonishment—and then nodded and smiled! And the next morning the tails all neatly packed, and高原 of my husband.

But after all, everyone's tails in England are a bit tight these days... nobody's got him on for so long," grinned Jean Pierre.

This, then, is my husband!

But there is a lot more to it than that. There is our daily life in Hollywood. We live in a beautiful house—a Florentine-type house which was a birthday present from my husband to me, as well as a second wedding anniversary present. (Oh, yes, I remarried—let me know about presents.) What's more, the house was a complete surprise.

I'd seen it and loved it, then I had gone to Chicago. Jean Pierre called at the hospital to bring me home. He brought me to our new house—which he and my sisters Consuelo, Adita and Lucita had fixed up for me in advance. It is a large house, with a large garden and a roomy upstairs in the cellar. I looked at all of it and I said, "Jean Pierre, a man's house is his castle. I am happy."

He stood beside me with his arm around me and he said, "Darling, this man's house may be more like a hotel than a castle. I am happy too."

Both of us were pathetic. We always have three or four house guests, and twice a month we give formal dinner parties. But it's the unexpected daily messages and jammed house guests, however, that make it. We have to have a private family dinner in order to get through the downstairs of our house, I have to elbow my way through a crowd of people—Jean Pierre's friends! He attracts people like a magnet. When we are all talking, oh, look! and I am all sitting, oh, look! in a large circle of friends. I have seen him surrounded by our friends, the Gene Kellys, the Charles Boyers, the Louis Jourdans, the Mark Shoffmans. When his friends are all talking, arguing, playing cards, even dancing.

In the midst of them sits Jean Pierre, pulling his pipe and writing his latest play! He can concentrate completely in a noisy room.

Now, right here let me tell you again that I am methodical. Every night before I go to bed I write down these things for the next day: the menu, the laundry list, and all my errands to be done. It is a simple thing, but I turn over nothing is planned for—thanks to my husband!

All of us know by this time that we must always plan for extra for dinner. But Jean Pierre never sweat about it. He and I have a curious way of figuring our expenses. We usually have four people sitting down to every meal. The only time he noticed that there seemed to be some extra guests unexpectedly was one Sunday night when there were only three of us, and I was out of my mind over what to feed them.

That night I got him aside and I moaned, "But I can't do it! I can't! It's the cook's night off, and we haven't enough food in the house anyway!"

Jean Pierre patted my shoulder. "I don't know, dear. But you will know." And I did. Always I keep lots of bread in the house, and big bowls of chocolate pudding are always in the refrigerator for emergencies. This night I utilized the bread and pudding, opened cans of cold ham which we had frozen, and I crowned it with cheese, and I made huge platters of potato and Russian salad. And I served wine—Jean Pierre does not drink without wine. It turned out quite a success.

My husband is like this, too: Every morning he gets up in a beaming good humor. Again, I am the opposite. He starts to get the jitters when he gets up. I opened. But I beg him, "Please, darling, don't speak to me before I have my coffee." Then he says, "Angel, don't be mean," and smiles at me—and what can I do?

We are also opposite about our clothes. Jean Pierre hardly knows what he has on. When he takes his clothes off he throws them all over the place. Then when he comes down stairs and other hung up, he says, very aggrieved, "I like my clothes on the floor—who picked them up?"

Once last summer, when he had only three suits to his name, two of them were worn out. And the third, he was wearing the third, or it would have been gone too. He came home happy and said to me, "Now I have only one suit to wear, which is fine with me. No indecision when I get dressed!"

But on the other hand, he is very particular about what I wear. He notices everything I put on, and when he doesn't like a new hat, he says very gently, "No darling. Please don't wear that."

La Quinta. Youngsters go to bed early, as everyone knows, and the desert nights at Palm Springs are very magical—particularly at a luxury spot like La Quinta, where some fifteen miles outside the Palm Springs tangle-dazzle. Out there the eternal desert silence enfolds the very mountains. The scent of sage and wild verbenas hang on the air and the stars are bright and silver, like wonderful Christmas-tree ornaments.

Such nights, such settings are made for romance, and on that evening Joan Crawford sat alone on the porch of her La Quinta bungalow. And the lights of an airplane glowed red and green as the plane circled, then landed. In another few moments a tall, dark figure strolled toward her.

"The moment I heard you were stopping here, I flew down," Greg Bautzer said. "I can't break through that telephone guard of yours in town. You're either busy or drive a car. If you're busy, look at this picture. She's the one who has been Possessed for 1947."

Her new seven-year contract with Warner Bros. rates her $200,000 a picture, the choice of stories, directors, producer, cast — anything. Bautzer, who has been inside, has pictures she desires. The night table at her home is piled high with scripts submitted to her by every studio in town. Fabulous offers from Broadway and London stage producers really butter her up. She has become a great artist as well as a great personality and the world of acting lies at her feet.

She just showed her newest picture, "Possessed," in a Warner Bros. projection room. The small, select preview audience at the showing had been particularly tough-minded. Two of the men present were sophisticated New York critics. Mention of great power, one of the women present was a lady of the widest influence, and not at all a Crawford fan. Yet at the end, we all reacted alike.

The lady had said, "This is the best performance I've ever seen in my entire life."
The man had said, practically in unison, "There is an important Academy Award Contender for 1947, Miss Joan Crawford, a gem, with a promise of great things for the future."

Suddenly the trio turned to me and asked, "Do you suppose Crawford's going to marry Greg Bautzer?"

It is the human side, running hand-in-hand with Crawford, which throws everyone—including Joan herself—and makes her an everlasting subject of discussion in Hollywood. Everyone wants to know if Gregson Bautzer, the handsome lawyer, will become her next husband.

I don't know whether or not she will marry again. Joan doesn't know either, and that's the truth of it. Of course, Walter Winchell did announce that she would be married some time this past April—which was actually before her divorce from Philip Terry became final. Louella Parson's said she would be married about May first, when she was free, which made a lot of sense and was highly probable.

Joan and I have been the closest of friends for many years. I wouldn't surprise me at all if Joan does marry, and soon. It wouldn't surprise me either if she never marries again.

Joan and Gregon, from Phil just prior to Christmas of 1945.

She had known Greg Bautzer casually for years, since in the restricted social circle of Hollywood they were bound to meet occasionally. She had never had an important date with him until April 19 of last year.

That date Greg did up in the dancing style that was bound to appeal to a girl who can't stamp a letter without dramaticizing it.

Joan, with her two children and their nurse, was in Palm Springs, staying at the very beautiful but extremely quiet Hotel

Sunday picnics with Peter Shaw and her children, Christina and Christopher. There were and still are a couple of New York gentlemen, who are so enamored of her that they frequently fly out to Hollywood just to see her. She has had a few dinners with Steve Carne — maybe she'll collapse if you knew some of the names of some of the characters who call her daily — and never get anybody but her devoted

Right there is where the score stands at this moment.

Joan adores all this attention and excitement, as what girl wouldn't. Watch her on a dance floor and she is the most excitig, gay sight. Yet more nights she is quietly, at home, dining with the kids at six, and after they're in bed, reading, or perhaps having two or three very close friends in, for a drink and a little chat with friends like Jerry Wald, her Warner producer, and her beautiful wife, Connie — or Curtis Bernhardt, the director of "Possessed," or Billy Haines, her friend from her early Metro days.

THOSE are two sides of her, but those are only the beginning of her complexity.

There is, for instance, the girl athlete that crops up every summer. Right now she is coaching in tennis with Eleanor Tennant and coaching in swimming with Paul Nass.

She is already a fine horsewoman and a good golfer, but that's not enough. An average mortal would be content to go neatly through a pool, or tidily about a court — but Joan has to be a champ.

When you know intimately you also encounter Miss Crawford's other side.

This phase crops out every now and then and manifests itself in intensive house cleaning. No small item of tiding linen closets satisfies her when in this mood.

She has to get down and scrub, literally.

She has an enormous kitchen, almost completely stocked with stainless steel.

You should see her, her hair screwed up on her head, her eyes becoming fanatically as she scours every inch of that steel, and then, nothing satisfied, go into her monster diner room and start waxing the floor and woodwork. She keeps right on going, through the library, through the music room, through her upstairs sitting room and the bedrooms. It is hard, dirty work and only sheer exhaustion eventually stops

her. Why she enjoys it, and gets a boot out of it only heaven knows. Certainly she doesn't.

Then there is the Joan Crawford, who quietly supports a clinic where scores of toms have been removed, babies have been born, and difficult operations performed, for all of which she pays, even

Warm embrace—warm friends; Photoplay writer Ruth Waterbury, Joan Crawford

As an actress, you can imagine her supply all the knowing provocation necessary to the role. Anderson is remaining at the same time confusingly clean and untouched. You really can't blame Twentieth Century—Fox for their decision. Peggy is "Forever Amber" and Never Amber" all at once.

"Life" continues the little lady who has lived just twenty-one years of it, "is very well balanced. As an unknown, I might have kept Amber and met with envy and hostility.

"I lost it, and found friendship. sym- pathy and kindness—things it might or di-

In the country that she came from the little Cummins is far from an "unknown." She has been enjoying sensational successes with British theater, radio and film fans ever since she was thirteen.

MOORE English in appearance than Irish, Peggy is a native of Killiney, outside of Dublin. In her extraordinary way, she was born in Prestatyn, North Wales. Adding unexpected diversion to her mother's visit to an aunt there, currently, she is the only known Californian who can claim Hollywood as a middle name. Her father was William Hollywood Cummins, a direct descendant of the gentleman after whom Hollywood, County Down, Ireland, is named.

Peggy's childhood home in Killiney, was a modest one, surrounded by a garden, a small private wood and a tiny strip of beach. Keeping up with her two older brothers she became an expert tree- and roof-climber, not to mention fence-jumper. Today, she swims, dives, fences, rides horseback or a bicycle with equal equa- nimity. The brothers grew up to be R.A.F. leaders, one a noted Cornishman and scenic artist Harry Cummins. Their little sister grew up with several broken bones nicely mended, and only one permanent scar on her right knee.

Peggy joined the Abbey School of Ballet at the age of seven. Her dramatic career began when she was picked from the class to play a child's part in Dublin's famous Gate Theater. From then on, she was in great demand and at the Abbey, but by coincidence all the roles seemed to be of little boys.

A brazen schoolgirl role in "Women with a Past" opened the doors to "The Slaves" and "Young London" for Peggy. She was signed to work with John Gilbert, her new husband, and "working" of the family that the youngster with the slanted green eyes and the lilting voice was developing beyond her oppor- tunities. He persuaded her mother to take her to London, and London producer, Audrey Blackburn.

Blackburn was not interested in a child actress—but one hour after meeting this one, he had signed her for a revue. The revue, "Let's Premiere," ran on her thir- teen birthday—and flopped. From it, however, she stepped into television, and eventually into the notice of a Warner talent scout who signed her to come to America. A week before signing, war was declared and the contract was cancelled by mutual agreement. But Peggy was des- tined to come to the United States and this was finally arranged for her soon after.

In "The Late George Apley," Peggy screens slightly larger than her diminutive five-one, and the ninety-eight pounds she slips into a size nine dress. The "Apley" people had a hard time finding one. "Working with Ronald Colman was exciting, he is such a magnificent actor. And the fact that he is English made things very nice.
With Edna Best in the cast, too, I knew we'd always take time out for tea," Peggy said.

"During the picture, we got together and bought a cow. The little children there need fresh milk so badly. They brought the cow on the set and we had our pictures taken with her. We got so attached to her—she really was a sweet thing to come.

"The really touching, wonderful thing, was when the stagehands, prop men and other technicians, put some money together and sent another cow. It impressed me so much. It's hard for any one who hasn't been over there to know what their generosity will mean."

Peggy loves to laugh—unrestrainedly, unexpectedly, often without rhyme or reason: "It's a release—a way of cleansing yourself. I'll talk for hours on the phone with anyone who'll laugh with me. Sometimes I know I'm not tidy—tidying my bed, or polishing my shoes. But there will be bedrooms that need tidying and unpolished shoes after I'm gone. It seems to me that I do myself more permanent good to make myself a better person, by laughing."

"I've been searching for the something that lies behind this Irish girl's very small, very hard, very dry face. She has unusual intelligence and sincerity, but there is something more. . . . You've found it in that last little speech of hers; that matter-of-fact acknowledgement of the impermanency of material things."

Peggy learned this first-hand as the youngest member of the Women's Voluntary Service; in Germany. She learned the spiritual value of laughter, doing her giggling Fluffy in "Junior Miss" to the accompaniment of falling bombs and shrieking sirens. As she later tells you, it was "most of the time. Then, I'd look down at all those faces in the audience—not a soul moving from his seat—all of them looking toward the stage, as if that were where his life hung. Their calm always cured my panic."

During the making of "Moss Rose" she found herself a laughing partner worthy of the name, one Peggy: "He's such a nice person—terribly considerate of everyone. And he's got all of jokes!"

"He loves to tease, the same way I do. I think your word for it is 'kid.' Five and six times a day the phone would ring for Victor, and the door man who answered it would always call, 'It's your mother from Kentucky!' And Victor would say to the director—'but I can't keep my mother waiting.'"

"But I know of one conversation he had with his mother that was real. It was after they cast him in the role of the star picture. He called her up and said, 'Hello, Mom—they've got me in Sing Sing!' His mother must have a sense of humor, too."

Peggy's own telephone rings quite often, with baritone emanating from the other end. Inevitably, you must ask the newcomer her opinion of Americans versus Europeans.

"Of course, there is bound to be some difference in people who live differently, dress differently, and who think under different conditions. But people are like scales—when one has nothing the other one lacks, then the other has something to balance it."

The outstanding trait of Americans as noted by the Cumminses, mother and daughter is, "You are so terribly polite, no one could feel strange in a country where every one is so courteous. Just between us Americans, this comes as a sort of shock—you take a second look into Peggy's green eyes to see she is not 'teasing.'"

"So many Americans are very serious, you suspect that maybe courtesy is the natural result of the Cumminses approach: "The people in the shops and the markets are all so friendly. 'Thank you,' they say, and mean it. Only one phrase of yours confuses us. Sometimes, when we said 'Thank you,' the person would just say, 'You're welcome.' It didn't sound like an invitation, and we thanked them. But it took us a while to catch on that 'You're welcome' is the American way of saying, 'Thank you, too.'"

In the over-all way, this little Irisher loves people and loves life. The warmth of this appreciation runs through all her conversation. All her emotions are extremely human, she has a sensitivity for the sight and sound and smell of small, human things:

"The sight that stirred me most? Well, perhaps I haven't seen it yet because to me so many sights have been very wonderful. There is nothing so beautiful, I think, as walking through the door of a room and seeing a picture you love sitting there—your mother, a dear friend, or maybe the two of the sitting room."

"Of course, my new car standing out front was a sight I'll never forget, either. And when they were fixing up my dressing room on the lot, I kept finding excuses to run in and out the door so I could be struck over and over again with the lovely blue walls that they were giving me."

ANGER terrified her. She would run away from it if directed against herself, or skip the distressing sight of other people quarreling. "I refuse to hate anyone—because you'd have to hate yourself even more than yourself to become so confused inside."

Now that she is a permanent resident of California, Peggy revels in the feel of peace. She has a phobia against crowds and their high-speed, high-pressure events don't appeal to her. She loves to drive at night with the car top down, and to park on some high hillside to breathe in and absorb the night, the stars, and miles of spreading peace and quiet."

The bright sunshine does painful things to her extremely fair skin, which for years knew nothing but England's fog and damp. After taking the sun carefully, a few minutes at a time, she is feeling boastful about the faint golden tint beginning to show on her arms.

The weathering process is in preparation for her next picture, "The Black Rose," which will have Cornel Wilde as its hero. A great many of the scenes will be shot on location in Monument Valley, Utah.

There will be plenty of opportunity for horseback riding and, next to people, Peggy feels very chummy towards horses. "They're so intelligent, I think," she says. Currently, she's learning the slogan. She pulls it from her purse and reads it to you: "Have you what you give? Just that—if you give out happiness and good, you also keep it. Those are the only words I can find to express my deep appreciation for the kindness and friendliness of the people in this town to me."
Sun and Shade Parade

(Continued from page 55) the dresses become elaborate and very feminine. These are the two trends and they both make sense. I can remember when Hollywood stars thought it was their heaven-sent duty to be dressed up at lunch as they were at parties. But now, it’s the simple, uncluttered dress for busy days and elegant creations for romantic nights.

For luncheons at home and other informal wear, Diana Lynn has a ducky dress of navy blue, gray and yellow print fashioned out of your great grandmama’s favorite cotton gowns—percale! It has a cool off-shoulder neckline, particularly becoming to rounded shoulders. The skirt is full and balloon length. Tiny spring flowers in the hair and a hat with a shell pink chiffon. For dancing nights Diana also has one of the loveliest evening dresses of palest gray chiffon and lace that Edith Head has ever designed, I think. The gray chiffon skirt is worn over a pale cyclamen slip. The lace apron peplum is removable and falls to the floor in a fishtail effect. The “bust bolster” also has a simple removable collar, leaving a bare-shoulder evening gown when it’s not worn.

Betty Hutton has a wonderful white sharkskin suit. The jacket is made with deep reserve, and an extremely long waistline to cut out to give a full flare at the back. The skirt is straight with a small slit at the side. Instead of a blouse, Betty wears a vivid emerald green assot and pins her new-fangled collar to the jacket. She accessorizes it with a Greek key clip and a pin that looks like a freshwater fan. It’s a right smack in the middle of it.

Incidentally, Betty’s shoes were the talk of a big party that Carole Landis gave. They were, of course, the evening show-stoppers, flapper sandals, with platform soles edged in gold to match the trimming of her lovely dark brown marquisette gown. Mona Freeman, looking like a little Grecian goddess, was a dream in the same off-the-shoulder shell pink chiffon. The bodice was drapped artfully around one shoulder, leaving the other bare. And the backline was slashed to a new low. The skirt was wonderful—full—and recorded., with the faintest all-over design of scrolled iridescent sequins. She wafted around like a breeze—and nobody suspected that she and Pat Neely are going steady.

At Carole’s party—like just about every other party you go to these Hollywood nights, they’re playing that hilarious lemon-under-the-chin game—and it’s making for a lot of fun. Everyone sorts stands around while a girl—or a man (whoever chooses to start the thing off) puts a large lemon between the chin and against the chest. It is held there by pressing the chin down on the fruit, but not too hard. Because the object of the game is for a man to take the lemon away with his own chin and neck and whatever-shoulder-manipulations-he-can-devise—without-using-hands! If the fellow can succeed in getting the lemon beneath his own chin without having it drop to the floor, the game continues by having a gal take it from him by the same means—all hands still being behind, minds you. Well! The gyrations, contortions and squirmings you go through to manage this are really hilarious. Before me, you don’t always manage it. It certainly is a new way to get lip rouge all over a fellow’s coat! Lynn Bari, who was at the party, remarked that if they keep playing it around here, she’s just going to have to put the pre-game hanky concession.

Lynn looked lovely too in a story book gown of white chiffon that featured the bare-shoulder neckline, the bodice gracefully shaped to the bust, and a hem that followed a line that is getting tremendously popular.

The very drab, uninteresting, and rather commonplace dress of Joan Crawford, who is famous for her expertise in the realm of fashion, was finally given a much-needed update by a dedicated team of designers. The new ensemble, created for a special event, has become a testament to the transformative power of dressing to impress. This particular outfit, characterized by its rich navy blue hue and tasteful detailing, perfectly complements her tall and slender physique. The skirt is cinched at the waist, accentuating her slim waistline, while the blazer is tailored to fit her frame. The ensemble is further enhanced by a pair of matching high-heeled shoes, which elevate her presence on the red carpet. This transformation not only boosts Joan's confidence but also serves as a reminder of the importance of choosing the right attire for occasions.

More people are smoking CAMELS than ever before

"The shortage taught me the big differences in cigarette quality," says Miss Decker

SMOKERS everywhere shared your experience with cigarettes, Miss Decker. They too smoked many different brands . . . and compared.

And millions found that experience is the best teacher . . . that for smoking pleasure you just can't beat the rich, full flavor and the cool mildness of Camels. That's why today more people are smoking Camels than ever before.

But, no matter how great the demand:

We don't tamper with Camel quality. Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

YOUR "T-ZONE" WILL TELL YOU...

T for Taste... T for Throat...

That's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your T-Zone to a T.

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS than any other cigarette

Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,597 doctors to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.

MacKinlay Kantor’s Sateevost story, set in the embattled border states, seethes with scores of exciting scenes; night raids by black-hooded marauders; bare-knuckle fights to the death; gunplay; breathless races against the elements; lovers’ nights alone on moonlit mountainsides.

Van in this new element is an elemental Van, a different Van, a man who’s really in the van.

No wonder that between the fights and the feuds, Van finds time to sing tender love ballads to Janet Leigh—the girl of his heart—and sings as he never has before.

Gusto went into the acting of stalwart Thomas Mitchell, Marshall Thompson, Selena Royle, Dean Stockwell. Zest went into the screenplay by Lester Cole. Roy Rowland’s direction, the production of Jack Cummings have vigor and taste.

All is rosy in “The Romance of Rosy Ridge”.

Not far over the horizon are two other M-G-M biggies: “Song of Love”, starring Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker, which shapes up as one of the greatest love stories of all time; “The Unfinished Dance”, in Technicolor, starring Hollywood’s biggest little star, Margaret O’Brien.

Entertainment-wise, M-G-M shines bright in the summer skies.

The HUCKSTERS

Screen Play by Luther Davis • Adaptation by Edward Chodorov and George Wells • Based on the Novel by Frederic Wakeman
Directed by JACK CONWAY • Produced by ARTHUR HORNBLEW, Jr. • A Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer Picture
A reliable guide to recent pictures. One check means good; two checks, very good; three checks, outstanding

\section*{The Hucksters (M-G-M)}

Nearly everyone read "The Hucksters" and everyone had something to say about it. Here's more parlor talk—a good picture, quick and to the satirical point with Clark Gable as an attractive "Huckster" and Deborah Kerr as the lady so remote from his fast and fascinating ways. Said lady comes to warmer life than she did in the book; she's handled here by that competent Britisher Kerr. The children keep out of sight most of the time, thereby letting everyone get right on with the interesting business of producing laughs at the expense of that great American Field—advertising.

When Sidney Greenstreet put on the straw hat and egomaniac expressions of Ewan Llewelyn Evans, he made the picture. Without him, it might have been just another; with him it turns into two-check entertainment.

Looking very well and playing the whole business straight is Gable, with Ava Gardner vibrating with lots of promise all the way through. That worn-out and worn-down advertising executive is Adolphe Menjou who shouts his "Check" to Mr. Evans with just the right degree of hopeful subservience.

All the facts of the film stick closely to the facts of the novel in most instances; it will probably sell itself to you with ease.

Your Reviewer Says: Who'd miss it?

\section*{Brute Force (Universal)}

A straight right from Hollywood comes along in this powerful and intense bit of filmmaking that stars some pretty intense people. Bowing to take the realistic honors are Burt Lancaster, Hume Cronyn and Charles Bickford who play their way brutally through this brutal story of life in a U.S. prison.

Lancaster is just right for a "just right" role. He is strength working against brains—neurotic brains possessed by jailer Cronyn. All the less noble emotions are Cronyn's to portray: He comes through with something that will have you mopping your brow.

The story takes a little time off for some levity starring Anita Colby, who looks just as smart behind a gun as she talks on Photoplay's beauty pages. The other three women, Ella Raines, Yvonne De Carlo and Ann Blyth, who have but a few seconds to work with in flashbacks, keep the tenor of the story true.

The lesser roles are carried by some major-league performers—a handsome and earnest Howard Duff, Art Smith, Sam Levene and Whit Bassel.

This is not for the weak-in-heart—it's a story of frustration that wins its colors by reason of its power alone.

Your Reviewer Says: Hard-to-take.

\section*{The Long Night (RKO)}

There's a brand-new fresh candidate for "Any Girl" in this: Barbara Bel Geddes, who could be just anybody, not too pretty, just nice enough, and who happens to play an orphan—and very well—in a drab Pennsylvania industrial town. Fonda takes on the moods and manners of a common workman; you can actually feel his emotions. With a shrug of his suave shoulders Vincent Price turns into a slick character to add the final depressing note to a picture that's fine in portrayal and plot, but not pleasant entertainment.

Your Reviewer Says: Grips hard, sometimes too hard.

✓ The Roosevelt Story (Tola Productions)

Whether you are a Franklin Delano Roosevelt follower or not, you cannot help but be moved by this life story of the man who sat in the White House from the black days of the Depression through the blacker days of the world’s most devastating war.

Actually the picture is not a picture in the broader sense, but is a series of newsreel clips. These go back to when Roosevelt was Assistant Secretary of the Navy in World War I, preceded by some shots at the time of his marriage to Eleanor Roosevelt that look as if they had been taken by a family movie-camera.

Yet the producers have managed to thread through the patched-together film a narrative mood by using the voice of a taxi driver who watches the starkly simple caisson bearing the body of the Commander-in-Chief on its last procession.

The flashback account gathers in momentum and power right up to the President's last speech to Congress following the taxing Yalta trip. There is dark prophecy in his words and a direct dignity that brings Congress to its feet in a thumping tribute.

Your Reviewer Says: It will bring you to your feet, too!

✓ Living in a Big Way (M-G-M)

Kelly the dancer is the be-all of this. Just how much talent this guy Gene has you'll realize when you see him tripping lightly over some planks and boards or doing a gay little fantastic with a marble statue. It's enough to make you like any film, no matter what else is going on.

The "what else" in this is a fairly chuckly little plot about veterans' need of housing, along with (Continued on page 122)

Round-up: Mrs. Leslie Howard, now in Hollywood, may sell the screen rights to the life story of her late husband, Leslie Howard, who was shot down in a plane during the war. Dana Andrews, back on the Twentieth Century-Fox lot for the lead opposite Joan Crawford in “Daisy Kenyon,” has never looked better. That salt air he gets cruising about on his boat, the Vileehi, seems to make him younger and younger. Jeffrey Lynn explains his wife Robin traveled to New York alone not because of any trouble but because he was deep in “The Adventures of Black Bart” and couldn’t get away. They are very happy, Jeffrey says. Lew Ayres seems to have settled on Jacqueline White as his steady girl and he couldn’t have chosen a nicer one. Rumor has it Clark Gable isn’t exactly thrilled with “The Hucksters” but audiences are certainly thrilled with him. Even top actors admit he’s the dynamite king of them all.

A “Cast-Off” Gathering: Cal drove up Miller Drive last week to Kurt Kreuger’s “leg-out-of-cast” celebration. Kurt, an expert skier, broke his leg while skiing at Sun Valley several months ago. Ruth Brady, our idea of a dream girl, was there with her best beau, Richard Derr, and Audrey Totter, who once was Richard’s steadiest date, came with radio writer Fred Heider. Kurt confided to Cal that his real heart, Nina Vale, who once played in pictures under the name Ann Hunter, is in the East. Kurt will be there soon and there may be a serious announcement when they meet.
Here and There: That contested suit of Mrs. Mickey Rooney's, concerning her divorce settlement, threatens to make hot newspaper copy unless the whole thing is dropped—like a hot potato . . . The Orson Welles-Rita Hayworth divorce comes up the minute Rita returns from Europe . . . The expected baby in the Deborah Kerr-Tony Bartley menage slightly disrupted M-G-M's plans to make Deborah their shining new star of 1948, especially after "The Hucksters." But as soon as she returns from England where her baby will be born, the studio will carry right on . . . Maria Montez is sooo in love with her husband Jean Pierre Aumont she'll follow him to Paris where he's gone to make a movie . . . The Collier Young-Ida Lupino romance continues the warmest in town.

The Haymeses: No one was more surprised and amused than the Dick Haymeses when the radio blared the news of their separation and Dick's forthcoming marriage to starlet Margo Woode; for in their living room at that moment sat Margo, who will soon wed Bill Burton, Dick's manager. Bill, also present, wore such an expression of surprised bewilderment, Dick and Joanne had hysterics.

Anyway it gives us great pleasure to report the Haymeses have never been happier. "It's like a second honeymoon," Dick smiles. "And with the arrival of our third child in September, life will be complete for Joanne and me."

A year or two ago when Joanne felt she wanted a career of her own, friction was reported in the household. But Dick finally consented, so under the (Continued on page 13)

Dick's career is also zooming. After obtaining his release from Twentieth Century-Fox, Dick garnered a fat sum for one week's personal appearance on the Steel Pier in Atlantic City and returned in time to play the lead opposite Deanna Durbin in "Up in Central Park."

Party News: Cesar Romero called by for Cal around thirty-one evening recently and we took off to the hillside home of friends to welcome to Hollywood some Argentina friends. John Garfield "warned Cal to save him some supper as he left to make a speech for United Relief. He's taking his family to live in New York, he told us, and already has a place for them in the Village. "With eight hours flying time between here and New York, it's just like commuting," he said. "And if we don't like it we can always come back."

Cary Grant, we noticed again, is one of the best dancers in Hollywood. Cesar, voted the top, was fascinated by Cary's footwork. In better spirits than he's been in for a long time, Cary seems to be having a wonderful time these days.

Bob Taylor, handsome as ever, told us some of his European experiences and how much he and Barbara enjoyed their visit. But something tells us Bob will always prefer his good American fans who have always preferred him.

The Edgar Bergens and Kay Kysers talked raad all evening.

Sonja Henie, back from months in Europe, looked chic in a Paris gown but Stuart Bartholmes was nowhere to be seen. Sonja has confided to friends that that romance is over. Cal walked with Errol and Nora Flynn to their car just for a quick chat. Errol tells us his father, Headliners: Larry Parks looks engrossed in a Hebrew newspaper at Jack's Restaurant—kibitzing is wife Betty Garrett now in Ireland, may retire to live on the island Errol bought in the West Indies. Bill Howard, Dorothy Lamour's husband, kidded Cal about almost running him down on Sunset Boulevard but Dorothy, as well as Joan Bennett, Mrs. Bill Powell and others were too enchanted with Jimmy McHugh's playing and Jean Sablon's singing to move from the piano.

Cal and Cesar covered a lot of ground and decided it was by far the best party of the month. * * *

A Day with Lana: We joined Lana Turner in her dressing room and strolled over to the M-G-M commissary for lunch. Across from us Lana's little daughter Cheryl was the luncheon guest of Lillian Burns, the studio drama coach, and at this party "Mommy" wasn't invited. Cheryl was the belle of the commissary, in her Sally Victor bonnet and white gloves.

We joked with Frank Sinatra, thin as a tea sandwich in his Spanish costume for his "The Bandit," and he took it with good nature.

After lunch we strolled back with Lana to the "Cass Timberlane" set and watched that young and brilliant director George Sidney direct a scene or two.

"Let's make it a day," Lana suggested, and as Tyrone was dining with his mother, Lana appeared at our door at seven that evening for dinner.

Later Tyrone dropped in and we all joined in a "remember when" session. * * *

Who Was There: Franckhot Tone with his wife Jean Wallace were at the cocktail-buffet supper given by that charming hostess Elyse Hunt. All seems well again with the Tones, we are happy to report. Frances Langford looked a dream in white and husband Jon Hall seemed to enjoy the music of the roving accordion player.

Looking beautiful and wearing her hair in a new short bob was Mrs. Reggie Gardiner. Reggie couldn't seem to tear himself away from the outdoor hamburger grill, we noticed. But then neither could Cal.

Mrs. Herbert Marshall joined Mike North, Cal, Bob and Cleatus Hutton, Angela Greene and Stuart Martin at supper time and everyone pronounced it a bang-up party.

Plans: That fine actor Macdonald Carey who scored in "Suddenly It's Spring" told us on the "Dream Girl" set that he is arranging for a 1948 reunion of the members of his platoon—a radar outfit—who went through the Pacific campaigns together. Macdonald was a lieutenant in the Marines and did more than his share of island hopping.

One thing sure, Macdonald can be certain his buddies will find a welcome in Hollywood.

Wooooo—I'm an Indian: An amusing story this month concerns Dennis Morgan and Jack Carson who finally persuaded lovely Cleatus Caldwell to don a black wig and play a surprise hit as a beautiful Indian girl at the end of their picture "Two Guys from Texas."

"We wanted you because you're so beautiful," the boys said.

Cleatus looked amazed. "Is that the reason?" she asked. The boys assured her it was.

And then Cleatus had the last long laugh. She is, you see, one quarter Cherokee.

It's a Joke, Son?: When Peter Lawford went down to location in Miami to make "On an Island with You" he decided just for the fun of it to go around to his former employer, a parking lot owner, and see if he could get back his old job of parking cars.

"Mr. Brickfield, I worked here about seven years ago," Pete said, "and I wondered if there was any chance of getting my old job back?"

A COWBOY movie star who could out-ride most cowhands at sixteen, William Elliott has more authentic reasons to strut his stuff than any Western star in the business. And yet, he's the quietest in clothes and manner. Soft spoken, with no affected twangs or drawls, he's six feet two and every inch the handsome hero who could well grace society dramas. Only Bill wants no part of them. He's exactly what he wants to be—a cowboy star making million-dollar pictures.

Born on his father's stock ranch in Missouri, young Bill learned to ride almost as soon as he walked. When his father was made commissioner man at the famous Kansas City stockyards, the Elltotts moved into Missouri City. Those stockyards were the meeting place for all range riders of the West and from them Bill learned riding, roping, shooting, bulldozing and bronco busting. By the time he was sixteen, the cowboys were finding themselves outclassed in their own tricks by the rangy Elliott kid.

But it was really his first glimpse of Bill Hart on the screen that determined his future. He would be a cowboy movie actor and that was that. So he left college and set off for Hollywood.

At first they showed him into every kind of picture but Westerns. He stood around in full dress and pined for a six-shooter. Finally, his chance came. They made him Red Ryder and he was on his way.

Today, fans everywhere know Bill who is lovingly called "Wild Bill" since Elliott first made a picture based on the life of Wild Bill Hickock. Through the south, they affectionately call him "Mr. Wild" and all over the country he's known as "The Gentleman Cowboy." Fans like his fighting—it's clean, vigorous and gentlemanly. They like the fact that he never steps out of character or interrupts the action to whang away on a guitar.

Twenty years ago he married Helen Josephine Myer, the prettiest model and hostess at I. Magnin's exclusive shop, and has been happy ever since. Next to being made an Honorary Texas Ranger, he's proudest of his daughter, Barbara, who now attends Sarah Lawrence College.

Recently on a trip east to visit Barbara, he was stopped by a gentleman who politely inquired, "Aren't you Bill Hart?"

"No, but I hope to be," Bill said and right then and there began planning to bring to the screen, with himself as Hart, the story of another "Gentleman Bill."

Lunch with the Flyns: “Let's have lunch at Lake Side Golf Club,” Errol Flynn had said, so Cal picked up lovely Nora Flynn, and together with our mutual friends Louisa Wasserman and Julia McLaughlin of Argentina, we took off for the club.

This favorite stamping ground, or rather golfing ground, of Crosby and Hope, is only a few minutes' drive from the studio, so many Warner stars lunch there. We waved to Ann Sheridan as we made for the buffet table. Ann looked happy over being loaned out to Rainbow Productions for the film “Good Sam.”

Errol and Cal, with that fine actor Tom d’Andrea, between scenes we chatted with Tom Mitchell, also in the film, while Errol, Mrs. Wasserman and director Raoul Walsh joined in horse racing chatter. The Wassermans own one of the finest stables in Argentina.

The Hustons’ New Son: On the Mexican location of “Treasure of the Sierra Madre” a young Mexican lad hung about, his big eyes hungrily taking in everything. Evelyn Keyes, visiting her husband John Huston, director of the film, became interested in the boy and learned through other Mexicans his name was Pablo Albarran and that he wanted a job. Unable to speak English, there was nothing the boy could do, but the attachment between Evelyn, Huston and Pablo grew as the days passed.

When the time came for Evelyn to report to Columbia for her new film, “The Mating of Millie McGoigle,” she was loath to leave young Pablo. But imagine her pleasure and surprise when she went to the airport a few weeks later to meet her husband and there was Pablo also. “We’ve adopted him,” John said while Pablo grinned with joy.

“Never thought I'd become a grandfather.

At the first blush of Womanhood

by Valda Sherman

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm—There is nothing “wrong” with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome—Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger—perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to fairly gross perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike—Don’t take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid’s exclusive formula. That’s why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses—more men and women everywhere—use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself—You’ll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal—harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don’t be half-safe—During this “age of courtship,” don’t let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don’t be half-safe—be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

The Hustons will place Pablo in school where he will learn English and unless homesickness overtakes him, he'll become Americanized in no time.

Newcomer of the Month: When "The Unsuspected" was sneak previewed, a big "well, well, well," arose among the young ladies of the audience when Mike North made his first entrance. And because we believe you'll be wanting to know something of the handsome young man, Cal is giving you the ahead-of-the-news tip-off.

Mike is thirty, blonde, blue-eyed, with a dimple in one cheek and muscles like iron which come from faithful exercising. His divorce from Mary Beth Hughes became final almost a year ago, so all in all Mike is the most eligible young man in town. He comes from a long line of "show business" people. His parents and grandparents are famous throughout the midwest for their Ted North stock companies.

After graduating from high school in Topeka, Kansas (his home town), Mike went on to the University of Kansas, graduating with a B.A. Deciding to be a lawyer, he went back to the University for one year of law but the old acting bug was too deeply implanted in the boy's heart. So, after several summers in his father's stock company, Mike decided acting was his forte and came to Hollywood.

Twentieth Century-Fox signed him immediately but before he could graduate from B's to A's, he found himself a lieutenant in the Navy, and after three and one-half years emerged with seven battle stars and no job.

One look from Director Mike Curtiz, however, ended that. The director signed him to a personal contract, changed his name from Ted to Mike North and gave him the lead in "The Unsuspected."

Infectious Dandruff?...Listerine, Quick!

Make a habit of using Listerine Antiseptic and massage as a precaution. And if infectious dandruff does get started, remember to use Listerine Antiseptic and massage regularly. Listerine Antiseptic attacks an infection as it should be attacked... with germ-killing action... kills millions of the "bottle bacillus" (Pityrosporum ovale). This is the ugly little germ that many noted dermatologists call a causative agent of the trouble.

You'll like Listerine Antiseptic for infectious dandruff. It's so easy, so freshening, so delightful... so cooling. Almost at once you will see ugly flakes and scales begin to disappear.

Remember, in a clinical test, twice-a-day use brought marked improvement to 76% of dandruff patients within a month. Your scalp feels so much healthier, and your hair looks so much more attractive.

Listerine Antiseptic is the same antiseptic that has been famous for more than 60 years in the field of oral hygiene.

Cary Grant in a red checked sport shirt and Loretta Young in a red checked dress, were skating around rather shakily. We even had a spell of uneasiness there when both waved enthusiastic greetings our way. Cary stopped by our table for a chat later on. He said he's having fun in the picture.

We joined Una Merkel for a chat and were heartbroken to hear of her recent grief. Una, who has had more than her share of troubles, recently lost her fiance when he died in an automobile accident. Everyone wishes her more happiness for the future and with her good role with Van Johnson in "Virtuous" her career seems to be zooming again.

David Niven assured Cal he had no notion of exhibiting himself on skates after the wonderful show put on by skaters from the "Icecapades."

Cal’s Dailey Bulletin: He’s the lad you’re going to be asking about, writing to and cheering for when “Mother Wore Tights” and “Off to Buffalo” come your way. His name is Dan Dailey and you’ve seen the six-foot-four, blue-eyed blond guy before—but never as the sensational hoofer and actor he is now.

Doing pretty well at M-G-M, Dan was about to hit stardom when you know what came along and he joined the cavalry and hit for Fort Riley, Kansas. Later he went overseas with the Infantry’s 8th Division. In Italy he saw Gene Kelly doing the part he’d tested for in “For Me and My Gal” and thought Gene was great.

There didn’t seem to be much doing for Dan when he got back and to make it worse, he and his lovely wife were going through the usual readjustment period. Then Twentieth remembered Dan and M-G-M released him for “Off to Buffalo” and he was in.

Today he’s the fair-haired boy on his way up. He’s happy with his bride of four and a half years, who cooks like a dream and whom he met while she was a student at the University of Southern California. Fact is, Dan is a whale of a cook himself—especially in the crepe Suzette department and his seventy-five cups and ribbons attest to the fact he’s some equestrian.

He began his career hoofing at six; at fourteen was supporting himself and was referred to as a second Jack Donohue. He trouped in vaudeville, on cruisers and in burlesque before he hit “I Married an Angel” and “Stars in Your Eyes” on Broadway.

There’s a doggoned cute catch to his voice when he laughs, or have you noticed? He has a swell sense of the ridiculous, would love to bring the life of Jack Donohue to the screen and lives in a small apartment with no chi chi about it. Soon every movie fan alive will be Dan Dailey conscious, take Cal’s word for it.

Love Lost Department: In cold storage along with that white mink coat reputed to have cost thirty thousand dollars but didn’t, is that front-page romance of Joan Crawford and the erstwhile cowboy, Don (Red) Barry. Seems Red was a bit optimistic about securing Joan’s services for a picture (not a Western) and took the costly-present route to woo his prospect. Joan was indignant when the ruse was discovered.

Everyone regrets the unfortunate publicity afforded the actress, but wonders at the same time why she would accept such costly gifts (there were costly jewel trinkets too) from so new an acquaintance. It is reported that only the night before the blow-up, Joan attended a party all done up in rich finery. The next day, back it went to the shop. At any rate, everyone is glad it’s all over.

Twosomes—Old and New: When it comes to constant twosomes, don’t overlook Clark Gable and Iris Bynum, who are almost as constant as Peter Shaw and Angela Lansbury. ... Lana Turner and Tyrone Power are celebrating one year of being in love which gives the laugh to those who said the romance would last only a month. ... But when it comes to new heart affairs look out for Peter Lawford and Corinne Calvet, the French import. Pete is proudly showing the new beauty everywhere.

Hats Off Department: Since his separation, Mark Stevens finds himself (much to his confused embarrassment) the most popular and sought-after young man in town. But the actor is determined to escape all such romances and go his way alone. His amazing success on his Midwest tour with “I Wonder Who’s Kissing Her Now” may send Mark back East for more personal appearances at the Roxy.

At any rate, our hats are off to him for his fine deportment and we are lifting our chapeau at the same time to his lovely ex-wife, Annette Stevens, who is determined to make something of her life without Mark. Annette freely admits that her possessiveness and her lack of understanding Mark’s desire to have occasional moments alone caused the rift. Both are agreed, however, it’s a final one.

An English Complexion with lips of "Red Burgundy" ... by YARDLEY. Charming, fresh and natural.

SHE'S happy, she's content, she's in Hollywood and she's news. Her name is Gale Storm, but there are no storms or gales to mar the unruffled calm of her life. Sunny, natural and pretty, she's the ingenue lead in Allied Artists' bright movie, "It Happened on Fifth Avenue." Tried in the fiery furnace of quickies and Westerns for six years, she is still unscorched by career frustrations. Her goal of happiness reached six years ago when Gale wed Lee Bonnell, everything that has happened since is so much extra trimming on that solid foundation.

Every Sunday she teaches the primary class in the Hollywood-Beverly Christian Sunday School and on Saturday nights she and Lee may trot off to the movies with ice cream afterwards, providing all is well with the two children—Phillip Lee, aged four and Peter Wade, a year old.

In a small white cottage with green shutters in San Fernando Valley, the Bonnells and children, with one maid of all work, live the life of any suburban family. Gale is thrilled to death at meeting movie stars and still can't get over being seated next to Gregory Peck at a recent press party. She and Lee share one car and days that Gale is working, her husband drops her off at her studio, while he continues on to RKO where he is under contract—a contract that was interrupted by three years with the Coast Guard.

When it comes to really important things in life, Miss Storm knows what she wants. Lee was one of those "important" things. They met when both arrived in Hollywood, regional winners in Jesse Lasky's national talent hunt put on over the radio six years ago and called "The Gateway to Hollywood." Gale won for her state, Texas—Lee for Indiana. The contestants palled about together but no one paid much attention to Gale who was just eighteen and looked four years younger.

One week after Lee asked her for a date, she announced to her mother that here was the man she intended to marry. One year later she did. But not before each had emerged final winners in the contests which earned them a six-months' RKO contract.

At the end of six months Gale moved over to Monogram and gradually emerged from a sea of quickies into such films as "Sunbonnet Sue," "Are These Your Children?" and finally, "It Happened on Fifth Avenue" with Don DeFore and Victor Moore. That it probably will open a whole new field to the splendid little actress is just fine with her. It's just fine if it doesn't, too, because her home, the man she loves and two children spell complete happiness to Gale.

Born Josephine Cottle in Bloomington, Texas, her mother took the family of five children (Gale was the youngest) to Houston after her husband's death. In a happy home of sisters and brothers Gale attended school without one tiny urge to be an actress, despite the fact she did an outstanding job in San Jacinto High School plays.

No one was more surprised than Gale when she was chosen winner from her city, and after three broadcasts over a national radio hookup in Hollywood, pronounced final winner.

When Monogram arranged for Gale to make her first trip to New York, she first stipulated Lee must go along. Her sweet naturalness won her friends all over the place.

Hollywood never sees Gale in night clubs and seldom had seen her on the screen before her last big feature. But Hollywood is rapidly becoming aware of the little Gale from the Valley. Some predict it will blow a really big Storm in the year to come.

Glamour turn-out: The John Lunds were among those previewed by the sidewalk audience at the “It Happened on Fifth Avenue” premiere.

(Continued from page 26) you think we’re wonderful, we show people?” she beamed at Cal—and yet Fay belongs not only to a show world but a world of home, of a mother, a wife, a community. Bright, alert, broad-minded, the younger belles immediately seem to lack luster in her presence. By far the alive-est person on the “Off to Buffalo” set, she chatted intelligently, was interested in everything and everybody.

She lamented the fact her twenty-three-year-old son, now at Stanford University, had missed the youthful crushes and heartaches that are such a part of growing up. Like his father before him, young Redge was in the Navy four years during the war.

“He seems too old for those young feelings now that he’s twenty-three,” she said.

Strolling over, the bride Nancy Guild informed us she was having pork chops for her husband Charles Russell’s dinner. “Well, have apples with them by all means,” Fay said and proceeded to tell Nancy exactly how to prepare them, her short curls bobbing as she talked.

We came away convinced that Fay Bainter was the most coveted of all women—successful in her career, in her home and as a person.

Flashbacks: Belita and her husband Joel McGinnis were kept busy greeting their friends at the same premiere.

"Folks in the know here in Hollywood agree about a great Technicolor motion picture called 'Mother Wore Tights.' I am not in it, though I wish I was, but I'm one of the many thousands in show business who hopes everybody will see it.

"To us in the theatrical world it hits home. It's a story of family life and family affections—warm, tender and real—proving that in their hearts show folks are no different from other folk.

"'Mother Wore Tights' is fine entertainment. Betty Grable's in it and I vow I've never seen her more glamorous or fascinating. Playing opposite her is Dan Dailey, and five will get you fifty that his performance is going to make him a star over night.

"Why don't you have yourself a big time and see 'Mother Wore Tights'? I know you'll enjoy every minute of it."
IN Hollywood, where divorce is almost as commonplace as divorce in Chicago or New York, the news this month seems unhappily to be concentrated on marital misfortunes. On pages 36 and 37 of this issue, you will find Louella Parsons's report of the Hedy Lamarr-John Loder situation, and on the following pages columnist Sheilah Graham's analysis of the working dangers to happy marriages when star couples join in film enterprises.

Most ironical of the new stories is that concerning a charming new musical, "I Wonder Who's Kissing Her Now." The two young stars of this aptly named film, June Haver and Mark Stevens, in recent weeks have both announced separations from their spouses.

With voices rising in strengthening chorus against divorce as a national sickness sapping America's strength, it is unfortunate that the spotlight should veer toward Hollywood once again, especially in the case of June Haver, who has been married only a few months, after a front-paged elopement to Las Vegas, followed by a church wedding two weeks later.

It is natural to wonder whether there might be less marital disaster in Hollywood were the stars less emotional and impulsive in their wedding actions.

There is no connection except coincidence between the Haver and Stevens breakups, but drama and heartbreak are in both stories. Photoplay asked its associate editor, Sara Hamilton, to talk to June. Sara reports as follows:

"This has been a most unfortunate situation all the way around. June is a much brighter than average young girl and exceptionally talented. She can write music, dance, sing and, some critics suspect, act. She had known her husband, Jimmy Zito, for some seven years, but evidently not nearly well enough.

"June told me, 'I was fifteen when I met Jimmy. He was seventeen. We were travelling with Ted FioRito's band. I was singing. Jimmy was playing trumpet. Because we were the only youngsters with the band we went out together like two kids anywhere. I was with the band three and a half months and it was two years before I saw Jimmy again. Then Jimmy went into service and it was another two and a half years before we met again. Last November I (Continued on page 84)
It will be another several months before you, the public, will finally choose your favorite actor, actress and motion picture for 1947. This will be the fourth time that, through our national poll, you will vote for the stars and the picture that will receive the Photoplay Gold Medal Awards as the popular stars and picture of the year. But already you have stated your choices for the first half of the year. And as usual, they are interesting choices, showing many unexpected decisions upon the part of you, the public, with whom rests the fate of every movie made and every star’s career.

At the half-way mark, your five favorite actresses—listed alphabetically—are:

Ingrid Bergman (last year’s winner), Bette Davis, Greer Garson (a two-year winner), Rita Hayworth and Lana Turner.

Unless a dark horse, nowhere in sight at this polling, appears, one of these stars will win the Photoplay Gold Medal.

It is interesting to note that four of these young women were the most popular actresses of 1946. But in the six months since the 1946 Photoplay Gold Medal Awards were announced, Rita Hayworth has climbed into the Big Five list, replacing Judy Garland, who was on it last year.

The five most popular actors with the people of our forty-eight states—listed alphabetically also—are:

Humphrey Bogart, Gary Cooper, Bing Crosby (three-time winner), Bob Hope and Alan Ladd.

The six months that have elapsed... since the 1946 Photoplay Gold Medal Award winners were named have made changes in this list too. Since a half year ago, Spencer Tracy and Van Johnson have dropped from the list of the first five, giving way to Humphrey Bogart and Alan Ladd.

Now we come to the ten motion pictures which, in the middle of this year 1947, have proved the most popular with the approximately sixty million regular movie-goers. Listed in order of popularity these pictures are:

1) The Jolson Story
2) It's a Wonderful Life
3) Margie
4) Blue Skies
5) 13 Rue Madeleine
6) Till the Clouds Roll By
7) Notorious
8) Song of the South
9) The Dark Mirror
10) The Killers

However, some highly enjoyed motion pictures which were released late, and therefore have not as yet been seen by enough people to warrant our including them on the list, are “Boomerang,” “The Best Years of Our Lives,” “The Yearling,” “The Farmer’s Daughter,” “The Late George Apley,” “Miracle on 34th St.” etc.

Judging by our poll thus far, these pictures may very well be up toward the top of the list by the end of 1947.

And of course some pictures not yet released may well supplant pictures mentioned, or supply the winner.

The Strange Case Of HEDY LAMARR

John Loder and Hedy Lamarr, principals in the marriage break-up that is baffling Hollywood

In the sensational Lamarr-Loder marriage break-up, Photoplay's ace reporter gives startling facts about both sides of the story

John and Hedy are teamed together in "Dishonored Lady"

If ever a woman had everything other women dream of this side of heaven, it is Hedy Lamarr. Yet here she is, wracked with discontent, weariness of body and mind and an inner unhappiness that is almost beyond comprehension.

When the gods got around to Hedy, they ladled it out in shovelfuls. They gave her beauty with such abundance that it hurts. I have heard women (but few men) say of her, "She isn't my type of beauty," but I have never heard it argued that she isn't a beauty.

As the pampered wife of a Continental millionaire, she was adorned with jewels and furs and waited on like a queen while she was still in her 'teens.

As the movie favorite of millions of fans, she has known fame and the soul-satisfying fulfillment of living creatively.

She has been blessed with three beautiful children—two of her own and an adopted child.

Why should the break-up risks be greater for married stars who work together than for those who don’t? Here’s the eye-opening report of an eye witness

The test hasn’t come yet for the Powells

"Till Work"

S CARCELY a day passes that someone doesn’t call with the “exclusive” rumor that Judy Garland and her husband, Vincente Minnelli, are separating and getting a divorce. So far it hasn’t happened. Let’s hope it never will because Judy and Vincente are very nice people. But something is the matter—that’s obvious. One day Judy is so gay that it’s hard to keep up with her. The next she is morose, non-talkative, easy to take offense. And tired.

There’s the root of the trouble. Judy is getting no rest. She can’t get away from her work. Because she is working with her husband. And her work is now a twenty-four-hour-a-day job. Some people just can't live with their work—and Judy is one of them.

This will give you an idea of what is happening. I saw Judy the Sunday before the Monday that she started "The Pirate," directed by Vincente. It was at a Don Loper fashion show. And Vincente was with her. Judy was jittering all over the place.

"I'm nervous," she told me, "about the picture tomorrow. I haven't worked for a year and a half. And I don't know how it'll be. But," she said, with an apologetic glance at Vincente, "we made a pact last night not to talk about the picture for thirty hours!"

If any girl in Hollywood has no reason to be nervous (Continued on page 116)
Glamour, Junior Size: Elizabeth Taylor, piquant star of "Cynthia"
LIFE is real. Life is earnest. And life is full of junior complications for beautiful little Elizabeth Taylor these days. All a complete mystery to her chipmunk Nibbles and the rest of her animal kingdom, who feel no kinship with the new creatures invading their Never-Never-Land.

The noisy new Ford with twin pipes “that cost thirty-nine dollars extra” and have a wheeze reminiscent of Red Skelton’s 903. The crowds of husky high school boys in jackets and T-shirts. And equal crowds of girls in pedal-pusher and sweaters who comb their hair endlessly, refer to Nibbles’s beloved young mistress familiarly as “Liz” and to the T-shirts either admiringly as “rugged” or derisively as “drips.”

She’s still the same Elizabeth. Sincere, warmly affectionate, tender, with a depth far beyond her fifteen years, and a spiritual sweetness and unworldly quality that send her often into a dream world into which the other pedal-pushers can’t push.

She’s a saintly tomboy who gazes dreamily out over the Pacific eulogizing about life and death, and a few minutes later is on King’s back, laughing and whooping it up along the beach in the surf, her hair a flying black carpet in the wind.

You’ll still find her playing baseball at recess at the M-G-M school with Claude Jarman, who says, “she catches and throws better than any girl I ever saw!”

His gray-blue eyes looked up appealingly. Tiny trembles tugged at the corners of his sensitive mouth. While his small boy's mind accepted Daddy's simple explanation of Mommy's prothe situation.

I Meet "the Menace"

He went to jeer and stayed to cheer, for what else can a chap do when he meets a man who won’t stay in character

A BOUT a year ago I took my sister to see a picture called “The Seventh Veil,” at the Carthay Circle in Hollywood. Therein lies a frightening story.

To begin with, I discovered why I hadn’t been able to contact a certain girl friend of mine for at least a week. There she was, happily ensconced in row G, screaming herself into a frenzy over a guy by the name of James Mason. Aside from the fact that her squeals were shattering my concentration, I couldn’t help but become a victim of that green-eyed monster, Jealousy! After all, I had taken her to Mocambo at least twice; that, naturally, made me her legal guardian. I also felt that she had reached an age where squealing at screen actors was highly indecorous and a little inane.

As the picture progressed, my sister, a happily-married lady-like creature, also began to gurgle. I’d had it! This gink on the screen was obviously a menace to the average male enjoyment of a good film.

You may imagine my horror, a month later, when I woke up to find myself in London and all set to do a picture at the same studio with this ogre, Mason. Luckily, there was one point in my favor: I had two weeks in which to browse around that fascinating city, completely free from the bugaboo of having to go to work at Denham on my film “Meet Me at Dawn,” thereby escaping the possibility of running into “the menace” on the lot. As a matter of reporting, any time I happened to hear a derogatory remark about Mr. Mason (and like all figures in the public eye, one is apt to hear more unkind than kind remarks about them) I jumped up and (Continued on page 112)

MITCHUM-FREE STYLE

He rode the rails—to love and fame. Is Hollywood just another whistle stop for Bob?

BY THYRA SAMTER WINSLOW

UNTIL his thirtieth birthday, Robert Mitchum was completely a free soul. No one quite knew what went on behind his odd, inscrutable eyes or what often shocking—and quite as often true—things he was going to say. He did things he wanted to do in the way he wanted to do them. He was a tramp, a prize fighter, a wiper on a freighter. His was the sort of life that a thousand clerks, driven by circumstance to stay behind counters, dream of living, were they only free.

And now he is thirty. He is a screen star. And no longer is he Robert Mitchum, adventurer, an unfettered and unbound individual. Now he's a studio asset. And the big hand of influence is reaching out to smooth the rough edges of the clay that is Robert Mitchum, to try to make him sleek and usual and conventional and conforming. Already, the exciting love affair between the boy who rode the rails, without a cent in his pockets, to see the conventional and sheltered girl he loved—thereby practically ruining her very correct social position—is being smoothed down to a most usual girl-meets-boy affair. Already, Robert Mitchum's provocative and impudent conversation is being watched and guarded and touched up a bit.

Just the other day at luncheon Ingrid Bergman said, "One of the great troubles with the young stars that come to Hollywood is that they arrive (Continued on page 72)

Date with Bob and The Queen

By Dorothy Deere

Visiting Barbara Stanwyck and Bob Taylor at home for the first time is an experience that begins on a note of incredulity.

“We’re easy to get to,” says Barbara casually. “The first house from the corner of . . .” She’s named two of the best travelled streets in one of the most populous locales. You ask her to repeat it by way of testing your hearing.

The homes of top name stars are seldom conspicuously located. For privacy, the usual movie dwelling flattens itself behind a high wall perched on a canyon rim or lures you miles along a tangled route the well-known crow would go crazy trying to fly.

The Taylor residence, however, is a pleasant and open-faced white colonial set not too far from the street. There’s no forbidding wall either of shrubbery or brick, just an ordinary front walk running between rows of extraordinarily large and friendly pansies to a very visible front door. Realizing how often you’ve passed this house all unknowing has an unsettling effect. For a moment you have a wild desire to see what would happen if you’d step out into the stream of passing motorists and give a yell, “Hey, kids. Bet you’d never guess who lives here.” Then your better nature, which is that part of you that doesn’t want to get killed in a stampede, prevails.

The front door, when you’ve raised the knocker, flies open with an informal yank.

"Hello, c'mon in." Bob has opened it himself.

Crossing his doorsill you are once again impressed by the fact that as long as there are movies and as long as there are men as handsome as this Taylor guy the two will be getting together. He's a walking hunk of Technicolor, white teeth adding a flash of vitality to his strongly tanned face, yellow golfing sweater and sand slacks contrasting with his black hair. As always his very blue eyes hold that remarkable quality of secret laughter which invariably makes you feel as if you share a very funny story between you.

"The Queen just phoned," he says. "She was detained a little at the studio. We're fresh out of servants you know, so help yourself to the house will you?"

Part of this breezy hospitality is tossed over a well squared shoulder as he returns to the brace of studio photographers who have their equipment set up on the terrace. At this very first moment and every minute of your stay you enjoy the lack of self-consciousness with which your host and hostess go about their vocation of being top ranking glamour stars. None of those phony apologies or protests about the time sacrificed to their "art." To Bob and Barbara, motion pictures are both a business and a major interest, absorbing most of their effort, conversation and thought. On the ordinary Saturday afternoon Bob might be up in the blue yonder with his plane or perhaps enjoying a skeet shoot with Gene Raymond and/or Bob Stack. He's rueful but not rebellious about this "home sitting" his studio has requested and as a guest you are highly complimented that he credits you with understanding such things.

"Hope you don't mind the racket," he sings out between the pop of a flashlight bulb, the ringing of a phone, and the reiterated bang of a hammer somewhere on the outside of the house. "You should have been here (Continued on page 91)

how to make your mark—Hollywood style

BY EDITH GWYN
Photoplay's Reporter-about-town

A COUPLE of months ago we "warned" you that leading fashion arbiters were determined that padded hips, smaller shoulder lines and much longer daytime skirts be accepted by American femininity—and it really looks as if their edict is in full sway. With a couple of exceptions. We'll never believe—and Howard Greer expressed the same opinion to us—that American women will go for the padded-hip idea. That fashion just doesn't fall in line with the lives we live. But there's no doubt that the longer skirts and smaller shoulders are here to stay awhile. The only hold-out for the wide, square shoulder among the top-ranking designers is Hollywood's Adrian—and by golly, we'll stick with him or at least go down fighting!

As we look over the filmland glammer-pusses these days, the change in the fashion picture is striking. The fuller, wider, so much more luxurious skirts and sleeves; the freer hand with drapery in daytime dresses; the amazing abundance of rich fabrics and the lavish use of beautiful beading for evening wear. We have some really hot fall fashion tips—but will tell you a few paragraphs later.

SOME years ago, I remember, I stood before my grandmother waiting for her to tell me that I looked pretty. I was dressed for a party in dotted Swiss with a pink sash and hair ribbon and new patent leather strap slippers. However, instead of telling me I looked pretty my grandmother crushed me by saying, “Pretty is as pretty does, Anita. Just act as nice as you look and everything will be fine.” Not being any brighter than any other kid my age I didn’t stop to weigh my grandmother’s words. I thought only, “Oh, that again!” Consequently, later, at considerable personal cost, I had to discover for myself that no one of us is any more attractive than she acts. And one of the surest ways of being attractive, of course, is to mind our manners.

Obviously, all of us almost automatically say “thank you” or “please” and stand up when an older person comes into a room. But by good manners I mean more than this. I mean the sort of truly civilized and considerate behavior you get from a girl like Gene Tierney; from her entire family, in fact.

The Tiernys are a joy to know. Weekends when Gene is in the East, the entire tribe—Howard Tierney and his family, Gene and her daughter Daria, her sister Pat and their mother Belle—holiday at their house in Connecticut. They have a wonderful time with nary a squabble. Because not one of the Tiernys would think of imposing on another, of letting anyone do more than his share, of entering anyone’s room without knocking.

It’s the same with Gene and Pat who live together, either in Gene’s little house in Beverly Hills or in Gene’s apartment in New York. Pat is Gene’s secretary. But this doesn’t mean for an instant that Gene plays the grand movie queen and Pat caters to her. The Fabulous Life Of A Girl Named Jones

Jennifer stars in "Portrait of Jennie"

BY MAXINE ARNOLD

School days: Jennifer didn't want to be May Queen, felt her best friend Ruth (seated) should have been chosen.

ONE-YEAR-OLD Phylis Isley was walking with her parents down Broadway, a tiny part of that solid wall of humanity that moves up and down when the theaters are out.

She was oblivious to the milling masses, the shouting newsboys, honking taxis, electrical fireworks and the rest of the constant carnival that makes up Times Square.

Her hazel eyes saw nothing but the name "Ruth Draper," blazing away on one of the marquees.

"Someday my name will be in lights like that too," she said excitedly.

"Yes, yes, dear," said quiet-voiced Mrs. Isley.

"But, Mother, it really will!" protested Phylis, not to be done out of fame so fast.

Her dream then was to be a successful monologist like Draper or Cornelia Otis Skinner. When the Isleys had left Oklahoma City for the child's first trip to New York, her dramatics teacher had urged them to take her to see the star.

That night settled it for Phylis. "Someday I'll be up there..."

Today wherever you turn she is "up there." Movie marquees fight with each other in flashing the name of Jennifer Jones in "Duel in the Sun." She has proven her right to be there by running the gamut from saint to sinner on the screen, playing equally well the roles of Bernadette and the sexy, sultry half-breed, Pearl Chavez.

She has the unequalled record of winning the Academy Award with her first starring role and of having been nominated in every Awards line-up since.

But long before Oscar's votes started rolling in, early symptoms of stardom got her the votes of her childhood playmates, school friends, teachers and everybody who knew her. All of them sensed that this tall willowy girl, with her wide expressive hazel eyes, pink cheeks, her solid sincerity and electric enthusiasm, was born to be a star.

Jennifer's parents knew it, though they were too familiar with show business and its hardships to encourage her in that direction. Her father, Phil Isley, a lovable genuine person, had come up the hard way, travelling with tent shows and really toughing it until he eventually got into the theater business on his own. Her mother, affectionately known as "Dolly" to her friends, had worked in

But whether they wanted it that way or not, it must have been early apparent to them that she was born to act. For Jennifer was always coming home from school in different character, aping the mannerisms and inflections of children she’d been playing with. Later she took spells at being Janet Gaynor, Sylvia Sidney and Katharine Cornell. She really concentrated on Sylvia, studying her dignified, retiring manner, her low throaty voice and lingering look. “Some kind people said I looked like Sylvia Sidney, so I guess it was successful—the wistful business,” (Continued on page 118)

YOUR PROBLEMS ANSWERED
BY CLAUDETTE COLBERT

Editor's Note: Because of the increasing amount of work entailed in handling the many letters that come each month to Miss Colbert, PLAY has assigned her the editorial services of Fredda Dudley, well-known Hollywood correspondent.

DEAR MISS COLBERT:

I am twenty-nine years old, and have been a widow for five years. My husband was killed in North Africa in 1942. I still wear my wedding and engagement rings and use my husband's name. My friends have told me that I should remove my rings and use my given name and his surname.

I have a boy of seven and a girl of five. I've argued it would be unfair to the children and the memory of my dead husband to pass myself off as Miss Helen T. in preference to Mrs. Andrew T.

Will you please clarify this point for me?

Helen T.

After consulting both legal and social authorities I have secured the following information for you:

Your legal name is Helen Brown T. (Your maiden name is used whenever you sign legal documents.) Socially, you should refer to yourself as Mrs. Andrew T. Formerly it was customary for a widow to sign herself "Mrs. Helen T." but that has fallen into disuse.

I suspect your friends have some sort of mistaken notion that your use of Miss would make you more attractive to a prospective second husband, but statistics contradict them. Analysts of vital statistics say a widow's prospects of marrying a second or even a third time are good. Also the title of "Miss" would complicate matters for your children.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I was an only child, brought up by very strict parents; my father was a pillar of the community and active in the church.

I had every advantage, so there was no excuse for what happened. Just before I was fifteen I gave birth to a baby daughter under circumstances that ended my ability to bear any more children.

My parents sold their home, took my baby, and moved to another community almost a thousand miles away. I was placed in a private school where I finished my secondary training, and four years of college. During my junior college year, I renewed my acquaintance with my baby's father and we were married on Commencement Night.

I am now twenty-three, and my daughter (whom I have seen only twice, although I have hundreds of pictures of her) is eight. She has grown up in the belief that she is my sister instead of my daughter.

Now that my husband and I have our own home, and because we can't have other children, he wants to take our daughter and bring her up as our own.

I wrote to my parents about this. My father answered angrily, saying that I was selfish and heartless to consider taking my daughter. He (Continued on page 76)

(Continued from page 50) with a distinct personality of their own, great charm and great individuality. But, in no time at all, they copy the other stars they see. And before long, they become like the other stars. They lose the qualities that brought them to Hollywood. They become one of a row of paper dolls.

It is hard to believe that this will happen to Robert Mitchum. Hard to believe that his bright ideals, his brilliant sense of independence and freedom and individuality will be dulled into a pattern of conventionality. Of course, without this streak of difference, of color, of unusualness, he will be easier to handle, easier to mold into the pattern of a correct movie star. Still, perhaps the sleek patina of the studio scene would become to those broad cheekbones and shoulders, that curiously sensitive and almost weak mouth, the inscrutable and humorous eyes. But it's doubtful that Robert Mitchum, adventurer, will take easily to the role of Robert Mitchum, gentleman star. However, it will be an interesting experiment to watch from the side lines.

Bob started out when he was fourteen.

"My mother spoiled me," he said. "A wonderful woman—but if she'd had her way, I wouldn't have done anything. And I wanted to do things—so I lit out—and did them. Anything—null, some of them so I quit those. Fun, some of them—so I kept on. I learned to fight to protect myself—and then fought professionally. I'd burn my way to a town—or ride a freight, get up a fight, make a little money, and be on my way. I learned a lot about the country—and more about people that way."

He was born in Bridgeport, Connecticut, on August 6, 1917.

"I don't know too much about Bridgeport, though. I wandered too far away from it."

Very far from Bridgeport. On trains and boats—into every adventure a boy could think of.

"Of course I got into trouble. Any boy would. But I always managed to come out all right. I like people. I like towns. I tell you," his odd eyes lit up with a new light, "a strange town is always exciting. Every new place is a new adventure. I'd get to a new town and I wouldn't know what to expect. There would always be a new, interesting person to talk with. I'd hang around a bar—or wherever people were. Pretty soon, I'd have a chance to do something for someone, maybe—and then someone would do something for me."

"Pretty soon I'd be all set—for a while—" "Then the wandering foot, again. Or a misdemeanor. Or a fight. Or a jail sentence. Or a job."

"I could sing. Sometimes I got a job singing. Or I'd work as a bouncer in a cafe. Or I'd work as a longshoreman. Interesting, too. Everyone'sintersection is interesting, if you get to know him. I'd make friends—be on my way—"

"What about the astrologer? And do you believe in astrology?"

I wanted to know.

"It was a job, like everything else. Fun, too. For a while. Helped a lot of people, too. Didn't do much for me. It seemed the astrologer thought that my chart said I should stay in Chicago—and that I'd never make good in the movies or on the stage. Matter of fact, I never had any luck in Chicago. Just goes to show."

"I wrote songs, too. For a lot of night club entertainers. I wrote a couple of songs for Peggy Fears—one about a trip around the world—and for other singers. But I quit. Finally, I'd probably have put them all out of business if I'd kept on."

MRS. MITCHELL joined us. Dorothy is pretty, young looking, slender, with serenity and a kindliness about her. Everyone's motherly look in them. She'd been shopping, and doesn't like to shop, even now, when she can afford it.

"This was the moment to find out about their romance."

"I met Dorothy in Camden, Delaware," Bob said. "She was fourteen, and I was sixteen. This was during the period when he called Rising Sun, a little town just outside of Camden, his home."

"He was the bad boy of the town," Dorothy said. "I wasn't allowed to go with him—but I went. So that meant that no other boy in town would go with me. Then Bob left town. So there I was—all by myself. Lonely, too."

"I always came back," Mitchum said. "Usually, I rode the rods. But I got there."

"And tougher each time," Dorothy said. They thought of something. Laughed together.

"I hurt my leg," Mitchum said. "I told Dorothy and her folks I'd hurt it hopping a freight train. And I wondered why they were shocked. That sounded respectable to me—that's why (Continued on page 74)

Get the picture? He really tried to be conventional—in his way. He still does. Even when he tells shocking stories to get conventional people out of their own rut of conventionality.

After a six-year courtship, if you can call those odd visits "a courtship," they were married.

"I chased him for six years," Dorothy said. "But I got him, finally."

Mitchum didn't bother to deny that his wife had chased him. But she got him—that was the main thing. And she'll do all she can to hold onto him, though it's not at all sure he won't wander just a bit. The world is such a large and interesting place—but he'll come back.

After years of wandering, he and his family found themselves in California. He didn't have a job, though Dorothy was working. A man he knew got him a bit part in a Western. He'd said he could ride a horse—and he couldn't ride at all. But he stayed on. And did a lot of Westerns—because he needed the money: more money there than anywhere else he knew of. Then, when the baby was coming, they needed even more money, so he kept on in pictures.

"I like pictures," he said. "But you've got to take them seriously—be a real actor, or quit. I like acting. I like to understand a role—and then act it. Sometimes I forget my lines, but usually my ad lib lines seem just about as good. I don't take direction too well, I suppose, but so far I've been lucky—most of my directors have taken it for granted that I had some sense and they have let me work with them. You've got to do a thing as well as you can, today, in Hollywood. The time has passed for semi-professionals.

"There are too many pastel people—pastel characters—in Hollywood. They don't know how to portray a character because they don't know people. Some of them are just busy little people studying their lines. If they learned more about life, about people, about psychology, about acting and timing, their characterizations would be more believable, more truthful, easier to take. Pastel people can ruin a picture. I want movie characters to be real. If you can't contribute anything to the movies, get out! That's my motto. As long as I believe I can contribute, I'll stay. I want to write, too, but it's hard work—I've got to feel I have something to give or what's the use? Someday I'll get around to writing. You've got to be useful in the world, today."

Serious. Suddenly. About work. About people. About life. And this side was as much a part of him as was the side that made him jump the nearest freight car when things got dull. Or fight for money—or the fun of it—when he wanted to fight.

"Hollywood is fine," he said. "In a way, it's like New York. You get what you give, in both places. Big Hollywood parties interest me because of what I can see. I like to go and watch people arrive, all dressed up and formal. They act so distant. And then they begin to thaw. And, toward the end of the evening, they act like human beings—or like themselves, anyhow. The phones show up, after their formal waltz comes off, too. Yes, I like parties, though I haven't been going to them very long, in Hollywood. But not too many parties. Most of all, I like a few friends in..."

Bob likes the same people he knew before he became a star. Not fair weather friends, but the actors who started out when he did. He's a little worried about some of them.

"I haven't changed," he said. "But they have. They treat me differently, because I've got ahead. Only a few are the same."

It's been said that, since he's made the grade, Mitchum is pretty much of an easy mark for the easy loan, the quick touch. He gave away so much of his first year's salary that he had practically none left at the end of the year.

"I always spend all I have—much or little. It really doesn't matter to me. Now I have a manager. He puts me on a twenty-five-dollar-a-week allowance. I spend that—when it's gone I stop spending. I'd do the same thing if there were ten times more. This way, there will be something against the future—something for the kids." So he believes in providing for them—a future minus riding the rodeo.

Mitchum is as frank about his motion picture career as he is about his other lives. The Westerns he was in were the Hopalong Cassidy series. Then, for RKO he made "West of the Pecos," and "Nevada," both of which have been re-issued since his success.

When the war came, Bob tried to enlist but was rejected. Then he worked at Lock- heed for a while. It was while playing the role of Lieutenant Walker in Ernie Pyle's "The Story of G.I. Joe," that he was drafted, and was in the Army one year.

With the release of "The Story of G.I. Joe," Bob scored an immediate success, and as soon as he was discharged he was right back in pictures. He co-starred with Dorothy McGuire, Guy Madison and Bill Williams, in "Till the End of Time." His recent successes, "The Locket," "Pursued" and "Crossfire," put him right on top. "Out of the Past" will soon be released and Bob is now established as our newest glamour star, with some of the charm of Clark Gable of ten years ago—and a lot of added attraction that is Robert Mitchum.

Bob is completely natural and unspoiled, with a native attractiveness which he is clever enough to take advantage of. And why not? Hiding your light under a bushel went out of fashion a long time ago.

Of his three suits, he admits that he bought only two—one he stole from the studio. He really doesn't want or need any more, he says. He has only one pair of shoes, which he thinks is enough. Hasn't he just one pair of feet?

Mrs. Mitchum says he is a fine husband, interested in the children and in household things, even ready to listen to her troubles after he's been at the studio all day. Of course he doesn't pick up his things—but she doesn't expect him to. His only dislike, he says, are people who have set habits and who are always saying the expected thing.

That's Mitchum. A curious mixture of naivete, sophistication, adventure, indiscretion, simplicity, modesty, conceit, exhibitionism, introversion, extraversion, understanding and doubt. A complex, interesting and amusing personality, living, just now, in a safety zone of his own making—yet ready to accept and experiment with life. Loving his wife and sons—yet with one eyebrow cocked for adventure. Wanting to make pictures—and good pictures, too—but not at all sure that pictures are a complete future. Brilliant enough to write important things, once he puts his mind to it, and yet afraid to write now, because he might not achieve the rather vague goal he perceives ahead.

You'll be hearing a lot more about Robert Mitchum during the next months. After that, it's completely up to Robert Mitchum, himself, as he knows only too well.

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am in the Navy and before coming in I went with a girl I loved deeply. We'd known each other all through school and I thought we were set for the future. However, when she knew I was going to join up and be away several years, she said we should forget each other.

I got to thinking it over, I decided—especially after seeing some of the other girls in this world—that she was tops. I wrote to her, asking her to come back. She was 'ready' deal as on again, but she hasn't answered my letters. I have gone out with plenty of other girls, some nice, some not so nice, but I can't get interested in any of them. Can you tell me how I can win her back?

Kurt J.

To answer you specifically: As you still have some time to go in the Navy, and since your exgirlfriend won't answer your letters, I would say that there is nothing you can do until you return to your home town. When you see her again, you may be astonished to discover that she is not the paragon you have studied in your dreams.

But, I think some light should be shed upon the entire matter of attraction between a man and a woman. The surest way to lose someone you admire is to be too eager or too obvious. Much praise, not only in love affairs but in all the other things of the world is given to patience, and to the philosophy that what is right for you will be yours. This doesn't mean that if you spend your days in a hammock someone is going to stuff tender roses in your hand; but it does mean that if you work diligently at the task of the moment, a just reward will surely be yours.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a girl fifteen years old, and I have a younger brother who is thirteen. My father and mother have been separated for seven years, and divorced for two.

I really don't blame my father for divorcing my mother. I love her, but she is peculiar. She hates all my father's people and has never let me get to know my cousins because she says they are snobs. She says it is better to be an orphan, which she is, because one isn't bothered by relatives.

Three months ago my father remarried. My mother approves of this marriage at all. I had met my father's new wife several times before they were married, and even if it is awful to say, I may admit that I liked her. As a matter of fact, I would get to love her; she is witty and she laughs a lot. When she and I did the dishes in her apartment after dinner, we sang—not old songs, but groovy new ones. She loves my father very much, and he loves her. They like to have fun, and they seemed to like to have me with them.

My mother asked me never to see them again, otherwise it would break her heart. My mother is very unhappy and has had much bad luck. She says that many men fall in love with her but she does not want to get married. One is an orchestra leader, and I think he does like my mother, but she snaps at him.

How can I manage to be with my father and his nice new wife without making my mother mad at me?

Mary Ellen C.

Ordinarily I would not think of suggesting that a girl in her teens play cupid. However, I have come to the conclusion that happiness depends upon your mother's finding happiness. I think that she should marry again, and the way to encourage this is to give her back her self-assurance. She may feel that she is averse to a second marriage because it might fail. You can help her get over her feeling she is, and how much the orchestra leader admires her. Encourage her to live her life in a way that makes him believe in her.

Don't be obvious about this or you will spoil everything. You are going to have to learn tact—and for its acquisition you will get through all the days of your life. With a renewed interest in herself and her own future, your mother will not mind spending your reasonable amount of time with your father and his wife.

How much better it is to think of other people's happiness when you are not sure of your own. I do not say you must give up your love, but you must give up the notion that it is the only love in the world. It is not. There are other loves, and other joys, and other satisfactions. But to get back on the love track, you must cut off all connection with the man of your choice, and put yourself in the hands of a new man, and let him do what he can to win your heart.

I wish you the best of luck in this task, and I hope you will find a new love that will make you happy. Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am the President of a Teen-age Girls' club in our block. We have several times and all the most attractive boys ask our members for dates. Last month a new girl moved into our block and we want her to join, but she doesn't feel that she would fit in. Every morning she simply goes home from school and sits in the bay window and stares out at the club members passing by. She looks very wishful.

This girl thinks she is funny-looking and that no one likes her, but our club has decided to take her in and has asked me to write to you for advice.

First of all, she is tall and thin, with short, thin hair. Her nose is rather long. What should she do about her hair to make it more becoming? What sort of clothes should she wear to appear less thin?

Her skin is a lovely olive color, but it gets oily. What could she do about that?

This girl is really swell, and just needs to have her personality developed. It would be wonderful if you would help her.

President, Teen-Age Club

I think it is admirable for you to take such an interest in this new girl. She sounds as if she would become an excellent member of your group.

What Is It? Is it smooth and fine, she probably has difficulty in securing a satisfactory permanent wave, but there is a new radio-type wave on the market which people in the studio make-up department have told me is very pleasant. Have her ask her beauty shop operator about it.

To disguise her intense thinness, she should wear tailored suits with their flatting, padded shoulders. This will give for her oily skin. Be sure to cause by an expert. If she will consult her family doctor, he will give her information about food values which will improve her skin.

Claudette Colbert
Dear Miss Colbert:
The lady who lives across the street from me is very nice and friendly, but is always asking me questions.

In our apartment building there is a widow with two young children, so I work as her baby sitter whenever she wants to go out. This woman across the street asks me who the widow goes out with, how late she stays out, whether she gets a government pension check every month, etc.

She also asks questions about my own family such as, how much money my father makes, how much rent we pay, how much our clothing costs. I have been brought up to believe that it is wrong to lie and to be rude to one's elders. Still, I don't think I should tell this woman the things she wants to know, do you?

Helen D.

This woman is an old-fashioned Polly Pry and she should be heartily ashamed of trying to extract information from you. You may count on it, that any answer you happen to give her will be distorted beyond recognition and passed on.

Keep out of her way as much as possible. But if she corners you, ask the questions. Make up a list of stock queries. Ask her how she is, and if she says she isn't well, question her on every detail, then excuse yourself—expressing sympathy—before she has a chance to turn the tables.

Finally, if nothing else works, look her squarely in the eye and say, "I know that you are a loyal person. You wouldn't want to answer that question about a friend of yours, so I'm certain you'll understand my not discussing the private affairs of my friends."

Claudette Colbert

(Note: I could not resist publishing this letter. Its viewpoint may or may not coincide with those of other men now in uniform or who have been discharged. CC.)

Dear Miss Colbert:
Here I am in Japan, reading a Stateside magazine—a treat we don't often get. I got quite a kick out of the sound advice you dish out.

Here is something I wish you would print for the benefit of civilian readers. When a guy goes into service, he meets other guys that he never saw before and will never see again, but for a certain length of time everybody has to live like brothers. In barracks I have seen a college graduate in the upper bunk and a grease monkey in the lower getting along fine. Why in heck can't American civilians get along the same way?

Bob L.

Have you a problem which seems to have no solution? Would you like the thoughtful advice of Claudette Colbert?

If you would, write to her in care of Photoplay, 321 S. Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills, California, and if Miss Colbert feels that your problem is of general interest, she'll consider answering it here. Names and addresses will be held confidential for your protection.

(Continued from page 45) if I hadn’t, I never would have fully appreciated that wonderful cooperation from the entire company. I’ve never been as contented in my life but it took me seven unfortunate years to learn my lessons and profit by them. I guess no one can really tell another person how to change. You just have to learn for yourself, go through it yourself.

Susan, at long last, has recovered the original enthusiasm she first had in Hollywood. If her role in “Smash-up” hadn’t established her as a permanent dramatic star young women throughout the world would have been equally interested. “I’ll take the advice of that dramatic critic who saw me in ‘Adam Had Four Sons’ and wrote: ‘As far as I am concerned, Susan Hayward can go back to the Gowan Canal—and jump in!’”

Her starring roles in two subsequent pictures, “They Won’t Believe Me” and “The Lost Moment,” will secure her more firmly in Hollywood.

T WAS director George Cukor who originally saw Susan’s picture in a national magazine. Selected as a potential Scarlett O’Hara, she was brought to Hollywood. Being too young for the part, her Scarlett turned out too pink for posterity. Fortunately for her finances, but unfortunately in the public’s eye before she arrived for New York, she was signed by Warner Bros. Out of that deal she inherited her screen name and became the cheese-cake queen of Turbanville.

Six months later Susan signed with Paramount because they offered her a “strong dramatic” role in “Beau Geste.” In her first scene she sat at the piano while Gary Cooper and Ray Milland marched off to join the Foreign Legion. She wore curls and a satin bow in her hair. In her second scene, and incidentally her last one, Ray, the only surviving brother, came marching home again. Susan, now bursting into womanhood (with hair worn high on head) was still sitting at the piano working out her little problem on the keys! For she had packed in with Paramount days she played parts that were equally discouraging.

“They kept referring to me as a promising young actress,” she remembers. “What a joke. It’s just long enough can a girl be promising? I kept kidding myself into believing that someday I’d be this, or do that. Only someday never came. In the meantime I really made a mess of things.”

“When I arrived at Paramount I had preconceived notions and stubbornly clung to the belief that they were right. I was a green kid, fresh at times, and it was probably that quality that made them see possibilities in me. Then something happened. They gave a party to introduce all the young hopefuls to Claudette Colbert was there, Paulette Goddard, Dietrich—all the super-sophisticated, successful actresses.

“All my life I’ve been terribly frightened of people. At the studio it was the casting director before I go off, and publicists who asked endless questions. I thought everyone was so brilliant and I felt so inadequate. Then at this party, all these stars faced up to themselves. So or I thought. That’s when I got the idea that I should try and be like them.

“People around the studio had told me that I should change, that my attitude was wrong. So suddenly, overnight, I stopped being myself and tried to copy everyone else. As a result I got so mixed up and was more confused than ever. Some people:’ did try to straighten me out but their example was just another form of encouragement produced a glow inside, like good, fine wine. But mostly I was criticized. I guess it never occurred to anyone to try to mould the star, so I moulded myself.

“The only way I knew how to protect myself was to try and scare people before they scared me. Other girls were going right to the top, while I kept the parts no one else wanted and got a hell of a salary. But, being essentially a honest person, I felt like a fraud for accepting it. Things went from bad to bedlam. Then, out of a window she had called in and told they were loaning me out for the villain lead in ‘Dark Waters.’ All my faith was renewed, but just as swiftly as it came, it went.

“Unexpectedly Merle Oberon was available. Hers was a box-office name, so the deal to borrow me was called off. I was deeply hurt and humiliated. For the first time in my career I demanded and learned to know why—why hadn’t they stuck me?—why didn’t they insist on the loanout when the contract was already signed? That’s when I really found out the spot I was in. One of the top executives told me he had deliberately okayed the cancelation to teach me a lesson. I knew then I was somebody, I’d have to start all over again. Looking back, it’s probably just as well that they didn’t entrust me with an important role. I undoubtedly would have fouled myself up good.”

PROBABLY the most satisfying contract of her career was signed when Susan married blonde and bland Jess Barker, one of Hollywood’s most eligible bachelors. It was a tempestuous courtship, their eventual marriage only climaxed by the arrival of twins. They started out on a fifty-fifty b.s., with Jess naming Gregory and Susan O’Hara. A few months later their lives are complete. Susan and Jess have bought a three-bedroom house in the Valley. They spent all the money they had for the house—and haven’t a stick of furniture in it outside that lent them by Universal-International. Susan jokingly says she’s a real movie star now—she has a swimming pool.

Having discovered “people are only human” Susan now loves going to parties—especially where there are people who make her laugh. Next to comedians, her greatest enjoyment is food—any food—all food. And she’s never had to count a calorie in her life. One night when Jess was working late at Universal, he returned home to find Susan sitting up reading a book and applauding. He kidded her unmercifully, to which she replied: “Just be grateful that I wasn’t eating watermelons.”

Susan was a little girl in Brooklyn, Susan promised herself: “Someday I’m going to have a whole closet filled with bath towels—big thick, fluffy ones.”

At Erasmus Hall High School (Girls swimming Thursday and Saturday, etc.) the towels were thin, gray and dingy. The gray tank suits were dingy. The cold water smelled nauseatingly of chlorine. Those blue fingers—purple lips. Susan hates the very memory of it.

“Writing a letter like” but she prefers rich reds and vibrant yellows. Susan will never forget a creamy beige moulded-to-her-figure gown she wore in Paramount sent her to Kentucky to judge. She also originally modelled for Carole Lombard and Susan felt important and good. When she returned to Hollywood, there was a studio wardrobe woman waiting at the station to take the gown back again.

Susan likes the smell of new paper, her own natural red hair (in New York beauty parlors they always tell her what good “dye” jobs the Hollywood and other people who are excited about something. She doesn’t like men who smoke cigars in closed rooms—“You’ll have to watch everything he smokes,”—tired looking vegetables in shop windows, people who want things and don’t come out and say what they want, people who are conspicuously “important,” people who are pretentious.

There are still two wishes that remain unfulfilled. The first one Susan finds amusing. About the second, she couldn’t be nearer.

“I’d like to have sturdier legs,” she banters. “But I’m not exactly losing any sleep over it. On the other hand, more important, my one life hope is to eventually be like Laurette Taylor. To me, she was always sheer magic. Someday if I could accomplish what she has done, I’d really be proud of myself.”

Because she has come so far, Susan has no desire to force issues. So she has never met Danny Kaye and she wants to when the right opportunity presents itself. It all goes back to the time Paramount dressed her up in borrowed finery and sent her to New York to do personal appearances with the opening of her picture.

“I was a scared kid and didn’t know from nothing,” Susan recalls. “I had to be at the theater at ten in the morning. Unfortunately someone showed me the way. It’s a false start. That night I was taken to a late supper party at the Cafe Martinique, Danny Kaye was entertaining. He didn’t know how miserable I was when he sang ‘Molly Malone’ and dedicated it to me. And that moment I needed every ounce of encouragement. I shall never forget his kindness and someday I hope I will be able to do the same.”

In retrospect Susan reminds herself of the bewildered Great Dane puppy, who liked everyone and in turn wanted to be liked. All the other puppies seemed to get along. He did the same. They got on, but were terrible. That night I was taken to a late supper party at the Cafe Martinique, Danny Kaye was entertaining. He didn’t know how miserable I was when he sang ‘Molly Malone’ and dedicated it to me. And that moment I needed every ounce of encouragement. I shall never forget his kindness and someday I hope I will be able to do the same.

She eventually went to see Susan and returned to Hollywood. She had started behaving like her true self, everything worked out all right. “Promising young actress,” they called her. It now reads—“Promised Fulfillment.”

And even though she may say when being teased about the T-shirts, “I can’t go on just loving animals all my life,” she keeps adding more of them all the time.

But there’s no denying that the all-over affection she once had for her animal kingdom is now shared by a silver choker, a pair of flower earrings, a new peasant blouse, several seniors at Beverly High, and the roller coaster at the Ocean Park pier. With some swooning for Dick Haymes’s recording of “Mam’zelle.”

She likes to go dancing at the Cocoanut Grove, to play gin rummy, and to “pool” her finances with the rest of the gang and “go on everything down at the pier until I make myself sick.” One rather full day recently included a swim at the beach, a barbecue, a movie, a high school dance, then another movie, and a roller coaster ride.

“I just like to have fun,” she says. “You know, always doing things on the spur of the moment. Like going to a dance and leaving after one dance and going down to the pier. Or going in the ocean when it’s cold. You know . . . just have fun.”

Elizabeth and her brother Howard love to give beach parties down at the Malibu place for the Beverly High School gang. Her parents’ lives are now linked with yards and yards of hot dogs, but no matter how many they buy, they’re always fresh out. They go down to the beach house armed with mountains of potato salad, tuna fish and peanut butter sandwiches, homemade cookies and marshmallows, in a vain attempt to fill the youthful vacuums. It’s all gone almost before it gets there, and Mr. Taylor goes tearing down the highway buying out the six grocery stores within Malibu range.

In THIS Elizabethan period . . . life itself hangs on a telephone call, using a darker shade of finger nail polish, or the fact that a city ordinance says her beloved “pipes” will have to come off her new car.

She held out for a convertible from the very first, saying diplomatically, “Driving back and forth in it between home and Metro will be the only fresh air I’ll get, realizing this would clinch the open-top.

She was ecstatic the first night the car was delivered, and slept with the car keys wound around one thumb. The following day, undisturbed by the super-sports jobs in their palatial crates all over the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer lot, Elizabeth insisted that everybody in the studio come out in the street in shifts and see her new car.

“Do you want to hear my pipes?” Then without encouragement, she would climb in, step on the gas, and make them roar.

“Listen to them!” she said.

“I’ve only had my car a month, and now all pipes have to go off,” she says sadly.

“Mine aren’t too loud. They’re just right.”

Her recent awareness of things material . . . like money . . . springs from the monthly clothes allowance her parents have begun giving her. At first she thought this was a wonderful idea. “I’ll save up for months and have loads,” she said. And is amazed now to find that she has to keep borrowing a month ahead to keep even.

A couple of skirts, blouses and play suits, and she gets home stony broke. “I thought it would take longer to spend it than that,” she says.

On her birthday, Elizabeth asked her parents to give her a special sum of money “that I can spend on something foolish . . . anything I want.” They were agreeable until her foolish fancy turned towards a $75 John Frederics leghorn hat, trimmed with black velvet ribbon and a large pink rose.

Inasmuch as she never even wears a hat, Mrs. Taylor fished out an old leghorn of hers, they put ribbon on it, shaped for a pink rose at Sears Roebuck for $2.98, and the Taylor-made creation still blossoms untouched on a rack down at the beach.

Elizabeth is going through a slightly gypsyish age now. She loves any kind of jewelry, the bigger bangles the better, and combs her hair with a nonchalant fluff that she hopes will leave it slightly over one eye.

She’s a little fascinated by tight belts, lower neck dresses, and is very proud of her “Adrian” shoulder pads. She studies her reflection in the mirror sideways and worries about her weight . . . 110. “I’ve just got to take off ten pounds, and I like everything that’s fattening,” she says disgustedly. “I can eat a whole pie.”

Elizabeth’s always worrying and dreaming up ways to glamour herself up. “This dress needs something,” she says critically, of a frock with silver-edged ruffles around the neck. “It’s just too plain. Maybe he’ll

Elizabeth's brother, Howard, goes to Beverly High, and the other students think of her just as "Howard Taylor's sister." They address her as "Liz," obligingly forget that she's a motion picture star, and invite her to all their parties and dances.

"That's what I am to them ... Howard Taylor's sister," she says proudly.

She fairly worships her eighteen-year-old brother, and the blackest moment in her young life was when Howard was thrown recently from a wild horse, landed on his head on the wet hard-packed sand beach, and was knocked unconscious.

Elizabeth rushed up on King, pulled him out of reach of the waves, and held his head in her lap, sobbing and praying until he came to. "I just kept saying 'God—Dear God,'" she told her mother later, when Howard was safe in bed at home. "And suddenly he opened his eyes and smiled at me. But it was awful," she said starting to cry again.

Sometimes she and Howard double-date, making a foursome with Jerome Courtland, whom she met at a party, and Jerome's cute sister, Joanne. On other occasions she and Danny Buckley ("I met him when I was stagging it with a bunch of girls at a high school dance") go along with her brother and his date.

But "romance" is a very fleeting item in Elizabeth's life now. "Oh that was a long time ago," she says seriously, when you mention somebody she toasted hot dogs with, say, two weeks before.

On the subject of boys she says, "A boy's personality is what counts. Whether he's a drip or not. Of course it's really unfair to tell them 'drips,'" she corrects hastily, "but ... well ... personality means so very much.

Her first screen romancing was in "Life with Father," at Warner's, and in "Cynthia," at Metro ... in both instances with Jimmy Lydon, who gave her, in the latter, her first oh-so-fast movie kiss.

Elizabeth was literally swept into stardom with her performance as the teenager in "Cynthia," who was doomed as a Girls in the great, humming industrial plants of the land—girls to whom comfort is a "must"—found it pays to investigate!

Young women who had suffered chafe with their regular napkin tested a new, improved Free-Stride Modess. The purpose of the test was to see if Free-Stride Modess gave freedom from chafe.

The verdict: 84 out of 95 girls reported no chafing with Free-Stride Modess.

The secret of the chafe-free comfort so many girls found in Free-Stride Modess lies in the clever fashioning of the napkin edges.

Free-Stride Modess has extra cotton on its edges—extra softness—right where the cause of chafe begins.

The extra cotton also acts to direct and retain moisture inside the napkin, keeping the edges dry and smooth longer. And dry, smooth edges just don't chafe.

So safe, too! Free-Stride Modess napkin has a triple safety shield to keep you confident, carefree. On sale everywhere now, Product of Personal Products Corporation.

Walk with comfort! Try the new Free-Stride Modess!

Marriage Turnstile

(Continued from page 33) saw Jimmy at the Club Morocco in New York. He told me he'd be out in California right after Christmas and would call me up. Because our paths kept crossing, this must be it, I thought to myself, so we slipped away to Las Vegas and were married and two weeks later we remarried in the church.

"It was six weeks after we were married that awful disagreements arose. We were as far apart as the poles in our ideas and ideals, and we knew it. We parted at Santa Fe—not friends; not even with a hope of friendship between us.'

Sara ends her report: "Contrast with this the happy marriages of June's two sisters, Effie and Dorothy."

LESS spectacular than June's breakup, the separation of Mark Stevens and his wife is the more poignant for their years of critical times together when Mark was struggling to launch his career.

Photoplay correspondent, Jerry Asher, one of the good friends of both Mark and Annette Stevens, reports:

"This breakup might have seemed more understandable had there been one definite reason why these young people had to admit their marriage had failed. There was none. It might best be explained by saying that two people who needed each other badly when the going was rough slowly discovered how little they had in common with the rough spots smoothed out.

"The separation would have occurred before but for the advent of the baby. Then every possible effort was made to hold on and try and work things out. Mark left his home in Montreal at sixteen. A dreamer, an idealist, he battered his way around, holding every job from dishwasher on up and down. In Hollywood, Mark met with more rebuffs. One week he ate, the next meals had to be skipped.

"While under contract at Warners, he was asked to assist in a screen test. This is how he met Annette Hays, a young beauty from Texas. Away from home for the first time, Annette was young, lonely, scared. Mark was lonely and not scared a bit. He drove her home after the test. Mark didn't even have a job when they decided to cast their lot together.

"When Mark was finally signed by Twentieth Century-Fox, and loaned out for 'From This Day Forward' he knew this was his big chance. He had to make good. Then without warning, his spine, seriously injured in his youth, became so painful he thought he was going to die. Every penny he made went to the doctors. Week after week there was no relief from pain. Operation followed operation. Mark became terribly depressed, unable to bring to his marriage the youth and gaiety that normally might have provided the basis for happiness.

"When the separation came, Mark said, 'I am the one who is to blame.' Actually, neither is to blame and both are. Right now, Annette is remaining in their large two-story house overlooking Toluca Lake. Mark is living with a good friend and will move as soon as he finds an apartment. Mark calls Annette daily to inquire about the baby. When the divorce settlement is arranged, there will be no questions, no arguing. Mark loves his son and wants him to remain with his mother. He wants to see him as often as possible and, when the personal hurt has healed, he hopes that Annette and he will continue to know and respect each other."

Thus two more marriages that apparently have floundered in the troubled seas of today's world. These two happened to be Hollywood marriages.

The End
JERRY on the JOBS

HOW many times have you seen someone do an especially good job in a minor role on the screen and wondered "Who's that?" That's what you will do certainly when you see Jerome Cowan as the frustrated district attorney who tries to prove that there is no Santa Claus in Twentieth Century-Fox's charming film, "Miracle on 34th Street."

Before he became part of the Hollywood scene, Jerome Cowan had already made quite a name for himself on the Broadway stage.

Today, he is one of Hollywood's standbys and may be spotted at work on almost every major lot. He appeared in Paramount's "The Perfect Marriage," Twentieth Century-Fox's "Claudia and David," and recently in Warner's "The Unfaithful."

In spite of his studio schedule, Jerry, as his friends call him, manages to live a good, normal life. His home in Van Nuys is large but unpretentious—big enough to house Jerry, his attractive wife Helen, and their two little daughters, Diane and Suzanne.

Helen was formerly of the stage too. She has, however, completely abandoned the grease paint in favor of running a very efficient household and rearing her two daughters. She still manages though, to look like any man's idea of a pin-up girl.

Weekends for the Cowans are spent mostly around their swimming pool, usually with close personal friends who have made it a standing habit to drop in on them Sundays.

Definitely a man with a "green thumb," Jerry's interest in plants almost amounts to a passion. He spends a great deal of time caring for a good-sized walnut grove and a considerable mass of growing things.

His friends won't let him forget the time he was ready to commit mayhem when a telephone cable crew came along with the obvious intention of running a cable trench right through the middle of a Cowan palm tree! Casualties were avoided only when Jerry learned the crew had planned in advance to make a detour!

It's a good life and so far as Jerry is concerned, just as easy to achieve in Hollywood as anywhere else.

(Continued from page 35) study to our researchers because once again it proves the public's ability to make its own decisions. You, the public, cannot be pressed into liking a picture because of big star names. On the other hand, as in the case of "The Jolson Story," you will fight for theater seats to see a picture in which the actors are relatively little known, but which you hear was greatly enjoyed by those who have seen it.

Larry Parks, who played the leading role in this picture, was a new screen personality to you, the public. He previously had played a few unnoticed roles. Now, however, thanks to your high enjoyment of "The Jolson Story," his popularity is rapidly increasing. Evelyn Keyes, who played opposite Larry Parks, was known but she was not a star. The other principal players were William Demarest and Ludwig Donath.

Another interesting fact about the ten most popular pictures for 1947 thus far is that five of them are musicals—"The Jolson Story," "Margie," "Till the Clouds Roll By," "Blue Skies" and "Song of the South." "Song of the South," the fascinatingly unique and est to note, is Walt Disney's most widely enjoyed picture since "Snow White."

Now for some of the other surprise opinions you, the public, have revealed. The fastest rising actors of 1946 were Gregory Peck (top climber in popularity), Cornel Wilde and Glenn Ford. So far this year your choice puts Larry Parks and Robert Mitchum at the head of the rapid climbers. Another thing: Your 1947 votes at this point reveal that the most widely seen movie ever made (based on the number of people who saw it on its first issue) was "Bells of St. Mary's." More of you went to see this motion picture than any other in film history—even more than went to see the first issue of "Gone with the Wind," the previous record-holder.

Our polls have a way of dredging up surprise discoveries about what makes or breaks a star. They have, for instance, discovered that scandalous publicity doesn't always harm a star—as in the case of Errol Flynn's sensational trial in Los Angeles, following which his popularity increased slightly.

Your votes in our national poll also consistently prove that the more you see of stars on the screen, the more interested you become in them—all of which may be a shock to many stars whose credo is, "Don't make too many pictures or you may bore your audience." Ingrid Bergman is proof positive that too many pictures do not pall. She was in so many pictures released in rapid succession that at one time she was being billed simultaneously on the marquees of four theaters in big cities. Remember "Spellbound," "Saratoga Trunk," "Notorious" and "Bells of St. Mary's."

Actually, your votes clearly indicate that a star tends to lose popularity when his or her face disappears from the screen. A temporary example of that is Jimmy Stewart, a big star who was gone from the screen for years during the war. His popularity promises to build up rapidly after he has made a few more pictures. But right now the teen-agers are just discovering him. They had not seen him before his post-war roles. Whereas, stars like Fred MacMurray and Claudette Colbert keep on being box-office draws for the simple reason that they keep on making pictures. And of course radio shows of magnitude help stars like Bing Crosby and Bob Hope—since more American homes have radios (more than 90%) than have bathrooms.

There is also no question that you, the public, discover the actors in the beginning—and it is your interest in them that makes them into stars. The studios can only place the actor on the screen. You do the rest. It was you who, seeing Van Johnson in a bit part, wrote so many letters about him that Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer, surprised, upped him to stardom with your continuing approval.

The opposite also is true. Many times a studio, "discovering" a star, has by a gigantic advertising campaign attempted to enlist your support; only to fail. It is discoveries like this about your power that makes our polls so interesting and keeps our 300 interviewers constantly on the job intercepting you in your homes, on the sidewalks, in the stores asking questions. Your answers to these questions, in time, add up to the most popular stars and pictures of the year. And you may be sure Hollywood, ever mindful of this poll, will be eager to know who the winners of the Photoplay Gold Medal Awards for 1947 will be.

A check list of this month's popular and classical records, focusing attention on songs and singers from Hollywood

FIESTA: M-G-M's lavish Technicolor splash has an impressive theme, "Fantasia Mexicana," written by the brilliant American composer Aaron Copland and adapted for the screen by Johnny Green. The big movie company's own record subsidiary has an excellent two-part grooving conducted by Macklin Marrow that you'll enjoy. Leonid Hambo is the piano soloist.

THE HUCKSTERS: Ava Gardner sings the original song, "Don't Tell Me," fetchingly in this exposure of the radio advertising business. Margaret Whiting (Capitol) and Helen Forrest (M-G-M) are the disk distaffers.

THE PLOW THAT BROKE THE PLAINS: In 1936 the U. S. Farm Security Administration issued a striking documentary film that told the terrible saga of thirsty people and thirsty crops. Virgil Thomson composed the truly great score which captured the mood of the southwest. Now Victor has issued a fine album of this music with Leopold Stokowski conducting the Hollywood Bowl Symphony.

FRANK SINATRA: F. S. skips Hollywood music for Broadway's, doing two fine ballads from "Brigadoon." The melodies are "There But for You Go I" and "Almost Like Being in Love" (Columbia).

SONG OF THE THIN MAN: Something new has been added to the latest gumshoe adventures of Bill Powell and Myrna Loy. It's a song called "You're Not So Easy to Forget" and baritone Johnnie Johnston (M-G-M) is first to introduce it on the waxworks.

DARK PASSAGE: What the old tune "As Time Goes By" did for "Casablanca," Warners are hoping the late Dick Whiting's familiar melody "Too Marvelous for Words" will do for this melodrama. Tony Martin's new Victor pressing will help the tune get a start.

JIMMY DURANTE: The Nose, abetted by deep-voiced Candy Candido, clowns through "I'm Feeling Mighty Low" and on the reverse, has the grooves all to himself with "I'll Do the Strut-Away in My Cutaway" (M-G-M).

IVY: Recording artists are rushing to the studios to cut the theme melody Hoagy Carmichael penned. One of the better new ones is Vaugh Monroe's (Victor).

LAURITZ MELCHIOR: The movies' best known operatic singer modulates his powerful pipes to sing two lovely ballads, Cole Porter's "Easy to Love" and "You Are My Heart's Delight." If Melchior gets serious about swooning, the anemic crooners better run for cover (M-G-M).

THE FABULOUS DORSEYS: The highlight of this film, The Dorsey Concerto, is now available on an exciting 12-inch Victor recording.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Sibelius's rarely-heard Karelia Suite is now available in a single 12-inch Victor Red Seal pressing played by the BBC Symphony and conducted by Sir Thomas Beecham. Marc Blitzstein's exciting Airborne Symphony, dedicated to America's Eagles, is the outstanding symphonic album of the month, thanks largely to Leonard Bernstein's inspired conducting of the N. Y. Symphony, and Robert Shaw's narration (Victor). Yehudi Menuhin plays Bela Bartok's Concerto For Violin, a musical work capturing the spirit of the composer's native Hungary. The Dallas Symphony assists admirably (Victor). Piano music of Felix Mendelssohn played by Vladimir Horowitz is a top flight combination Victor has made possible in an excellent album. Bach's Brandenburg Concertos, No. 2 in F and No. 5 in D, is another new Victor album, this time played by the Boston Symphony with the incomparable Serge Koussevitzky on the podium.
Date with Bob and 'The Queen'

The spinet was bought, as you discover later, when Barbara learned to play piano for her role in 'The Other Love.' Mostly, however, it was purchased because 'we'd been wanting something to make music with around here, anyhow.' There's a nice elastic sound to a house that doesn't mind having its rooms stretched.

This current residence is a temporary one bought during Bob's Navy Air Force service when Barbara decided their rambling home in Coldwater Canyon was too expensive a dwelling place. Someday when building materials are available they will build their farmhouse—which will have plenty of room. Meantime, however, this fairly small abode is a two-story expression of the Stanwyck's extremely vital self.

IN PERSON. Barbara is a beige and brown girl, usually matching her brown hair and tanned skin in superbly tailored ensembles in the same shades. The only make-up she ordinarily allows herself is a bright dash of lipstick. Yet somehow it is this bit of vivacity which seems most indicative of her personality. Her favorite jewels are rubies and you are not surprised to find that she uses red or some shade of red in almost every room of their home. She uses it not garishly but simply, warmly and dramatically.

The living room has the quality of reaching out and enveloping you in cordiality. The walls are entirely covered with quietly patterned red calico against which the double tiered white batiste curtains look clean and crisp as a breeze. In front of the brick fireplace with its brass scuttle are two comfortable red and green plain divans with a low, wide antique table between them. The hooked rugs have a red farmhouse pattern and at each end of the room are open-shelved cupboards, one displaying a rare collection of Tobey mugs, the other precious antique plates.

The "pushed-out study" has its new spinet of course, and shelf after shelf of leather-bound volumes, screen scripts covered in calf and a complete collection of Life and Time. The existing feature of the room is a portrait of Barbara done in pastels by Paul Clemens. While you are studying it the original walks in.

She comes in quietly, straightforwardly the way she does everything else. There is a fresh, washed look about her face which has just lately been relieved of its screen make-up.

"Hello," she says in a way that makes those two syllables sufficient in themselves, an then gives a long, quiet look from her deep blue eyes toward her husband.

"Hello, beautiful," he says putting his arm around her and kissing her.

Barbara gives her long hair a toss for comfort, sinks into one of the plain divans and foregoes asking you whether or not you've been having a good time.

"Do you want to take my word for it that I'm a bad hostess or do you want me to go on proving it?" she asks with a frank smile. "Do you know you are actually the third 'company' we've had in a whole year? The first time we had guests was Christmas Eve and the other time was the night before we left for Europe."

The photographers have gone. The carpenters also have folded their kits and faded away. There's a quietude Bob acknowledges with a deep grin. "Good. Now we can get going on our favorite argu-

lyn, Uncle Buck did everything he could to help her. She still worships him, and he idolizes her and her husband. He lives in a spreading and comfortably furnished guest house at the rear of the long yard, close enough so that his advice and dry humor are immediately available.

The absence of servants on the premises is a temporary lull occasioned by the sudden illness of one retainer, and the sudden marriage of another. Necessity being the mother of unexpected talents, it has been discovered that Uncle Buck makes the most superb coffee and the best darned shirred-eggs-and-bacon in the State of California. Also, anyone so inclined can make themselves up a Dagwood sandwich from various ingredients in the icebox, and the copious accessories thereto displayed on a "Lazy Susan" in the breakfast room.

The Taylors' social scheme is a simple one. Their usual "evening out" consists of dinner at LaRue or some other not too noisy restaurant, possibly with their very close chums, the Jack Benny's. For dress, Barbara will wear another beautifully tailored suit, adding several heavy gold bracelets, and a large ruby clip and earrings from the collection of ruby and diamond pieces Bob has given her. After dinner—ten to one—they'll attend a screening in one of the studio projection rooms.

Evenings "in" are spent in the manner of most movie folk who must answer an early production call at six or seven in the morning. Talk is on fairly serious subjects—they dislike useless chitchat. While both Barbara and Bob are blessed with a deep-rooted sense of humor, there are no practical jokes played between this Mr. and Mrs. "Neither one of us can stand people who think they are being cute—"

Barbara reads a lot, and Bob pours over airplane building plans. He has a wonderful sense of detail, and knows his ships as if they had originally been blueprinted on his mind. Barbara, on the other hand, hates detail—unless you count the screen dialogue which she soaks up like a sponge. In addition, she goes on "picture jags," sometimes seeing two a night, if she has none of her own in production, and Bob and Buck are at the ball games.

"I'm just like any other busman," she says.

All of which means that when you finally make your exit from this movie-star menage, and turn to look back at it, you are no longer shocked to find it so close to the street. So is every other house on the block—and inside are two people as unpretentious, honest and hard-working as any other Mr. and Mrs. America!

The Strange Case of Hedy Lamarr

(Continued from page 37) And she has known love and companionship. No matter how many times she and John Loder separate and make-up and separate again, Hedy has loved him. I know. She told me so.

And yet I can reveal now that with all these things in her past, and yet she still holds of the material things of life, Hedy has been dangerously close to a nervous breakdown for the past year and she is still far from well.

I have been puzzled, and because I have always liked her and am therefore sympathetic, I have thought a lot about her. Several times I have scolded her in my column. I said she should snap out of it; that it is a mistake to let herself go and appear in public unglamorous, in slacks and sneakers—that she should do something, anything, to change her frame of mind.

So I was not too surprised one day to get a telephone call from Hedy asking if she might see me.

This was during her recent separation from John Loder when she had made up her mind to go back to him. It was a revealing moment because I don't believe she would have opened her heart to me if she hadn't been in a state of indecision.

She arrived looking beautiful (as usual) with her hair in a dark halo around her face and young and slim in a peasant blouse and wide skirt.

We talked all afternoon from the time the playroom was flooded with light, until the shadows waned and we were sitting in the dusk without bothering to turn on a light.

We talked first about her troubles with John Loder since that was uppermost in her mind. Obviously, it was a case of "can't live with him—or without him."

"JOHN really can't help things," she said gently. "He has had such a bad break in his career. If only he could get some permanent work everything would be all right. But as it stands now, I just can't go on living with him unless he has something to occupy his mind. You don't know how terrible it is to have a restless, unhappy man around the house all the time.

"The difficult thing is that John loves me and I care for him—if only he could get some job that would keep him busy and happy. You see, he is like all Englishmen—born and bred to be back-ground. He is fitted only for a diplomatic, professional or acting career." She sighed slightly. "He can do nothing with his hands! Why, once I asked him to hang some curtains—the simplest thing in the world, and he couldn't do it!"

I bit my lip to conceal a smile that could easily have become a good hearty laugh.

John really had my sympathy, for heavens sake, does he knows, he isn't the only man to balk at domestic chores. Yet it was clear that to Hedy this was a major failing. It is typical of the way her mind works these days. She has got herself in a state where she magnifies everything.

I said, "But, Hedy, that seems so trivial. John has been working lately (he had been back East for a stage engagement and made several films) and certain hanging isn't too important."

"I know, I know," she said a little impatiently, "but it is just one of a million little things that pile up. Everything that has happened to me lately has been wrong. I have been left alone so much with three small children. We had a burglary that completely unnerved me. I have had many business worries producing my own..."

pictures. There are so many people dependent on me—sometimes I think I am going to break under the responsibility. "But think of all the wonderful things in your life," I said, and this time it was my turn to be a little impatient. "Here you are a beautiful, famous woman with lovely children, your home and your physical health. You should start counting your blessings instead of living in a world of imaginary fears."

She seemed so downcast, I hated to be abrupt. But sometimes we all need doses of cold truth.

"I am trying more and more to do just that," Louella," she replied quietly. "I realize it has been a big mistake for me to shut myself off almost to the point where I have been living like a recluse. You aren't the only person who has talked to me this way. Not long ago, things got so bad that I felt I had to consult a psychiatrist—and he told me the same thing.

"But it isn't easy to shake off depression. When you are in my frame of mind you just can't suddenly become interested in buying clothes, or keeping social engagements or getting out. But I have made myself go shopping, made myself plan for a vacation, made myself accept a few dinner dates—and I believe I am getting better."

"Let me ask you something," I pressed on. "You say you have been unhappy with John, a man in your own profession and the father of two of your children. Were you happy, then, with Fritz Mandel when you were the bride of this fabulously rich man?"

"I was miserable," she answered. "I married Fritz before I was sixteen. He was terribly jealous. I had everything—never any money. I could charge everything I wanted, but he was exacting and critical. He would go into a tantrum if I wore the wrong jewelry—something that didn't go with my costume. But that is all over—and in the past. Although once, before coming to Hollywood, when things were going badly for me, he came to me and offered financial help. That was kind of him."

I LOOKED at this beauty and realized that she is convinced her troubles are the blackest in the world. She is reaching out for something, anything that is different from what she has. Even in her picture making, she is tired of playing alluring, glamorous beauties—the roles that brought her fame—and is seeking the exact opposite.

She said, "I am tired of playing bad women, unkind women and unscrupulous women. I want to do 'Cinderella'—it's always been my favorite fictional character. 'Snow White' is my favorite picture. I want very much to do a picture that is a beautiful fantasy.

"Hedy," I asked, "as a producer of your own movies, would you cast yourself as 'Cinderella'?

She laughed for almost the first time since we had been talking. "Perhaps not," she agreed, "but maybe some other producer would take the chance."

She left soon after this, and as I walked with her to the door, I realized I had obtained an interview with no logical ending—just a solution. For believe me, there is a solution to her unhappiness if she will only permit herself to find it.

It is a very simple thing—as simple as faith. You can talk to a friend until doomsday about happiness and, on the surface, she may agree with what you say. But the rare jewel of contentment and peace has to come from within ourselves. Right now, I do not believe that Hedy Lamarr understands herself or what she really wants out of life.
Since we talked, Hedy has reconciled with John—and then left him again. But when he had a slight operation on his leg, it was Hedy who went to the hospital and brought him home.

Yet now, the changeable lady has sued John for divorce. After a week together, according to John, the always unpredictable beauty began to grow cold and very nervous whenever her husband spoke to her.

"I'll leave you for a few days if my presence bothers you," John said, "and come back when you feel better."

To his complete surprise, Ronald Bautzer, attorney for Hedy, telephoned and stated that John should remain available so he could be served with divorce papers.

It was then that easy-going Loder hit the ceiling. He phoned Greg Bautzer, attorney for many glamour gals, and told him to say he would fight Hedy all the way if she attempted to divorce him.

"I shall file a counter suit," said John. "Why, I signed an agreement with her that will tie up my salary for the next four years. I promised to pay her for my board during the weeks I wasn't working. I signed it believing Hedy meant to reconcile with me. I was so happy to have her back that I signed the papers against the lawyer's advice."

After this Hedy and John got together. There will be no battle royal over property settlement in their divorce case. Greg Bautzer, John's attorney, has made a new settlement for John, which is equitable.

John says he loves his two babies and Hedy very dearly. When he was in New York on the stage, he called me to tell me how worried he was about Hedy, and to ask me to beg her to join him there.

After hearing both sides—John's and Hedy's—I'll admit, as a reporter who has covered the Hollywood beat for years I am completely baffled.

Of only one thing do I feel reasonably sure: This divorce, if it comes to pass, will not solve Hedy's problem of finding happiness. That comes from within a person—not from without.

If It's a Boy

There'll be a baby soon in the MARILYN NASH—PHILIP YORDAN home, after almost two years of happy marriage. The big event is scheduled for September. If it's not a boy, they'll have to think of another name than 'Danny.' That's the one already picked by the prospective father. But if it's a girl, they'll be just as proud and happy. The babe will have noted parents. Pop's the famous playwright—Mom's Charles Chaplin's newest discovery. She plays opposite him in "Monsieur Verdoux."

Mom's a Beauty

When interviewed at the Sulgrave Hotel in New York, it was a hot, humid Summer morn. Yet Marilyn looked cool, dainty and refreshingly girlish in her chic, figure-concealing gray maternity dress. Hers is a wholesome, healthy beauty; baby fine, ash-blonde hair, skin evenly tanned to a dreamy honey color and neatly groomed, heavy dark eyebrows, which emphasize the hazel shading of her friendly eyes. Before returning to Hollywood, she flew to Detroit to visit her mother, Mrs. W. A. Downs.

Happy Mother-to-Be

MARILYN has that spiritual radiance the promise of motherhood gives. At first, she said, she craved sweets, and ate too much. After gaining twenty pounds, she decided to adhere to her doctor's diet orders. Consequently, she hasn't gained another ounce, her complexion has cleared and she claims she feels wonderful... The first few months, she noticed her skin was dry and her hair dull looking. Daily massage with a rich lubricating cream or oil soon made her skin lovely again. Brushing a light, greaseless dressing on her hair quickly restored its former shimmering beauty. She had the dentist check on her teeth. She discarded high-heeled shoes for low-heeled ones, and found she not only looked more graceful, but could walk comfortably a mile or more a day. LILLY of the valley, lilac, gardenia and carnation toilet waters and colognes are her fragrance favorites. If women wear pretty maternity clothes, and keep well-groomed during pregnancy, advises Marilyn with wifely authority, husbands will think them more beautiful than ever. From the look in her eyes, Philip must have told her she is!

Ann Blyth
She was born at Mt. Kisco, N. Y., on August 16th, 1928. At five she made her professional debut on the radio. It was her work in the stage play "Watch on the Rhine," in which Paul Lukas was starred, that brought her a movie contract. At first, having a beautiful coloratura soprano voice, she was cast in pictures in which she sang. Then, playing Joan Crawford's daughter in "Mildred Pierce," she achieved her ambition to rank as a dramatic actress. You will see her next in the Mark Hellinger-Universal-International production "Brute Force."

Joan Lorring acted for the first time when, at thirteen, she came to Hollywood. Previously, when she was six, she had danced in the Orient, but as an amateur. Carole King DRESSES FOR JUNIORS

Eddie Stevenson, who created the Shirley Temple "Honeymoon" suit which is PHOTOPLAY's pattern this month, has a way with clothes that makes him one of Hollywood's top designers. Whether the call be for a soft dance dress or a flannel nightgown, Eddie is certain to dream up something new, feminine and utterly appealing. And he's a miracle man when it comes to draping a skirt so that inches disappear from the hips, or whittling down a waistline with darts and tucks strategically placed.

Eddie Stevenson, who created the Shirley Temple "Honeymoon" suit which is PHOTOPLAY's pattern this month, has a way with clothes that makes him one of Hollywood's top designers. Whether the call be for a soft dance dress or a flannel nightgown, Eddie is certain to dream up something new, feminine and utterly appealing. And he's a miracle man when it comes to draping a skirt so that inches disappear from the hips, or whittling down a waistline with darts and tucks strategically placed. Ever since the day he was graduated from high school Eddie has concerned himself with making American women more beautiful. And even before he had his diploma, his summer holidays used to find him working in the studios' designing rooms. His first full time job was Assistant Designer at the old Fox Studios. Then he was head designer at the First National Studios. Then he spent a year creating clothes for all of the stars who had worn his designs on the screen and wanted the same magic in their personal wardrobes. As designer at the RKO Studios, where he has been associated for many years, Eddie dresses stars like Shirley Temple, Ginger Rogers, Rosalind Russell, Hedy Lamarr, Laraine Day, Carole Landis, Dorothy McGuire, Olivia de Havilland and Anne Shirley.

"Stevenson clothes" according to the stars who love them "are never flagrant or loud." To a perfectly tailored suit Eddie will add such little soft touches as cut-stone buttons, round lapels, or a bunch of forget-me-nots in a pocket. For he believes that irrespective of how smart a woman looks, she should be pretty and feminine too.

Above all Eddie Stevenson implores women to make the most of their very own type. In other words, if you are the fluffy type do not copy your sleek sister. And if you have a small waist, or lovely shoulders see to it that every dress you own accentuates these features.

For a different look in gloves, try this idea with a pair of plain white shorties. Stitch carefully over the original stitching with colored thread. Say your thread is green. Then cut out of plain green fabric your favorite symbol which might well be a shamrock. Stitch the small shamrock on the cuff. You'll not only have a pair of gloves with a real made-to-order look but you'll be the envy of every colleen in town.

Are you the proud possessor of a chatelaine? A new and unusual way to wear it is to tuck flowers at the ends and drape the chatelaine like a necklace with the flowers on each shoulder. You might put two chrysanthemums on one end and a tiny one on the other for variation.

When you buy this wonderful blouse you don't have to consider what size you wear! It fits all sizes. For it has an elasticized waistband that can be worn in or out. It's made of an exciting print jersey and designed by Baar & Beards. Wear this gay and colorful blouse under your first fall suit. The price is only $2.98.

Here's a shoe that is a natural accompaniment for your tailored suits, tweed skirts and wool dresses. Today's walking shoes are style-wise as well as comfort-wise. This Queen Quality spectator pump can be had in either black or brown calf. They're $9.95. (Continued on page 113)

Maria's dress was of blended shades of pale blue—layer on layer under a skirt of fine white net. The bodice twisted into a girdle down the center. The white net skirt and also its matching mantilla were dotted with tufts of white chenille. Gorgeous! Laraine Day was there with her Leo, and she sported a dinner gown comprising of a full skirt topped by a black silk jersey, turtle-necked, short-sleeved "sweater." She also sported a pearl necklace of fourteen strands! Starting with a choker at the throat, the cascade descends and the long ropes flow, just above the waistline. Maureen O'Hara was there in a horizontally striped dress of bright red and white silk and I assure you, it didn't make you look exactly dainty.

Joan and Bill's new house is so full of charm and comfort—and arranged for entertaining with amazing ease, since the house is not large. The dinner party was given in a large semi-living room-playroom, with comfortable cushioned banquets against the walls, a good-sized bar, and one entire wall of glass which overlooks a lovely garden walk leading to their "ol' swimmin' hole" type of pool. All this outdoor view was beautifully lighted during the feast. Instead of seating her twenty guests buffet-style at a long table, she sat them down at one large, circular one—Joan arranged two long arrow glass tables at an angle to each other. The floral arrangements of gardenias and white sweet peas, the leaf-green glassware and very dark green china combined for a color scheme that was tasteful. Joan "took the coke" in more ways than one. Huge platters of ice cream—the individual portions formed into various kinds of fruit (in their proper colors)—were passed along with the table fare.

Dropper-inners later included David Niven, who is soon to leave for England and a visit with his two kiddies. And of course that movie, "Bonnie Prince Charlie," which he'll make here to show off for Alexander Korda. Anita Colby, fresh from New York, popped in too—and I noticed a shiny gadget on one of her plain black satin pumps. In answer to "What's that?" she said, "It's an earring. I lost and had French plaited hair." I think clipping one earring to a shoe along the instep where an ornament would naturally go anyway is a wonderful way to use that earring that everybody has lying around." Colby has an idea there!

These between-season days, there's nothing so comfortable as a cool sheer-woven frock—just the kind Carole Landis wore to lunch at LaRue. It's a black and white dress of very light, fine wool, with its flaring skirt (about fourteen inches from the floor) that has flame red line trimmings and a small back neck scarf. Howard Greer made it. Her hat, especially made to go with it, is a black beret type with perky flame red feathers. And her gloves are flame red too. Black pumps. A chic outfit for sports events and perfect under fur coats.

Lynn Bari could take in knitting for a living, if the stunning dress she actually knitted for herself is any indication of her prowess with the needles. It's so good-looking and she added an unusual and stunning touch by working gold thread into horizontal bars across the bodice—to tie in the golden yellow that forms the costume. The lines are simple, the yarn used was fine wool boucle in a maroon shade. The full skirt is almost fifteen inches from the floor. Lynn thinks that a tall girl should wear her skirts just a little further from the floor than a short girl, who gains height by the longer length.

Another gal who goes for knitted dresses is Esther Williams who lolls at the movies in an early fall two-piece number of ice blue wool. It's perfectly plain, with a deep ribbed skirt, plain round neckline and short sleeves—so much more comfortable under coats. Esther prefers platinum to gold jewelry with sports clothes and has a big white bangle and a graceful platinum clip in the form of a fish that she wears at her neck.

Most of the Hollywood gals are letting the locks down in soft fullness. Nora Edwardson was over to the house of coloratura Joan Crawford and swooped into her (with Errol) at a party and he, just like about every male I talk to, prefers hair that way and thinks Nora never looked so pretty. He's so right.

Two Joans, Caulfield and Bennett, make news for this session when you want to be warm, in case it's suddenly cool, and cool but smart if it's still hot. Spotted Joan Bennett leaving Romanoff's after lunch and even her cute French poodle couldn't take all the attention away from her navy blue raw silk dress, with its simple straight lines. The jacket is banded from shoulder to hem, and even the heat shades frame her chartreuse green. Her gloves were of chartreuse suede and her accessories were of navy. Joan wore a gold snake necklace and a big round gold earring. Joan Crawford was caught going the other way—to lunch—her soft sheer black wool suit was a knockout. It had a collarless, cutaway jacket and the longest pants ever! She's a big girl and they are front. The blouse was of checked white taffeta, with a little bow that tied at the neck. The jacket was lined with the same taffeta as the blouse.

Judy Garland and Dick Powell who are as busy denying stork rumors this month as Van and Evie Johnson were last month (but the Johnsons' turned out to be true!) did the Strip spots one night recently and went back to their home in the way of a new hat that is just right for pert little faces. Of natural colored felt (she was wearing a black suit) it looked like a man's straw hat gone pretty. It sits down low on her head and has French illusion green and cream colored striped satin ribbons around the crown, ending with streamers down the back long enough to sit on. June wears her hair long for the first time on the screen in "Virtuous" and in this picture there will also be no crying scenes, for which June says, "Thank the Lord!"

Now here's some fashion news I've been saving. The two hottest tips for fall are fans—all kinds of fans—and drop earrings. The small wing-type—or any up-the-ear type of earring—will be out completely by winter. Drop earrings are the thing and though they may start conservatively—you can bet they'll hang on to there before winter is over.

As for fans—they're going to be plugged for next spring still as the time to use. The most desired will be the little antique fans, lacy ones, beaded ones, the kind you hang from a chain at the waist—or even from the wrist. But feathered fans and fabric fans will be the vogue again before long. So hie yourself to the nearest junk shop, or antique shop, or hock shop, and pick up as many as you can—of the kind that Ma or Grandma used to love—or you'll be paying three times as much for the same ones in stores!

Mind Your Manners

(Continued from page 62) complemented with twin white and violet chairs. Half of the table is Gene's and half is Pat's. On the individual sides of the table there be have identical lamps, identical containers for cold cream, tissues, perfume and makeup—even identical flower vases.

I was talking to Gene the other day about the bachelor's ball and she and Pat keep on so happily. "I think," I told her, "it's all due to the fact that you Tierneys have the same manners with each other that you had in public."

"Good manners exert all are nothing but kindness," replied Gene. "If we remember to be kind to others, we have good manners—and to me that's one of the most important things in life. Manners show us in so many ways. You're right about Pat and me. I'm sure. It's because we observe the common courtesies toward each other that we haven't had a single argument. For manners are never borrow gloves or stockings without asking if the other is planning on using them. Nothing is more enraging than to plan a whole outfit around a certain dress—and then discover your apartment-mate to the advantage of having good manners toward the people I've invited under my roof."

"Over and over, you see, you'll find that real good manners--in public and thus become part of a personality—and are not stiff little affectations observed only in public—party manners."

All of us know by now that Mr. Mason has beaten up Britain's number one film star, Margaret Lockwood; battered the knuckles of the Go-go-like Ann Todd; driven to suicide the charming Dulcie Gray. But he is also noted for his pugilistic prowess with the sex that should be better equipped to protect itself.

By this time I was getting curious about the Junior Karloff, because his actions around the lot, reversely, appeared to be quiet, well-mannered and friendly. Determinedly unconvinced, I wanted to investigate for myself.

At this direct of moments the telephone rang, and a very lovely female voice bubbled, "Mr. Eythe, this is Mrs. James Mason. We've learned that you are making a film at Denham, and since we live nearby and you are a stranger in our country, James (she always calls him "James") and I thought perhaps you would like to dine with us?"

I cancelled a trap, imagined full well the Masons had learned, via the grapevine, of my violent antipathy to them; they, in turn, were plotting their revenge! But I gathered up all my Hollywood bravado and gave Mrs. Mason the arch reply . . . "Yes!"

After work I set out for Oleberrie Farm armed to the teeth with a carnation in my buttonhole. I intended to give Mrs. Mason the carnival later on, if I was still alive, after the film. And if I suspected would be sprinkled with arsenic.

When I arrived at Oleberrie Farm, the front door was suspiciously wide open. So I crept into the starkly English drawing room, chewing gum, and instead of a satiric cross between Merlin and Savonarola I found a middle-aged, jet-black woman, who looked more like a male lawyer, but was still more likely in the little office, gave the joint a quick casing, and swallowed my disappointment at not finding at least one Iron Malden. Then, from the furthest corner of the room, I saw the great Whitey Thompson, Tree and Lady Leeds (the Mason cats) leaped upon me and began to devour me with affection.

THUS, in the midst of much cat-flapping, the Masons and Mr. John Monohan discovered me. Johnny is a native Pennsylvanian, the Mason's closest friend, and co-author of Jim's latest film, "The Upturned Clock." They became friends when publicist Mason, an officer in the United States Army, was on leave in England.

The Masons had not entered on broomsticks. In place of a Lucrezia Borgia I found a petite, vivacious auburn-haired girl, and instead of a satiric cross between Merlin and Savonarola I found a middle-aged, jet-black woman, who looked more like a male lawyer, but was still more likely in the little office, gave the joint a quick casing, and swallowed my disappointment at not finding at least one Iron Malden. A vest and skirt make two very versatile members of your wardrobe. You can manage so many changes with accessories for this type of costume! For instance, a lightweight turtle-neck sweater and a brightly polished leather belt for sport. Or a white blouse, a silk handkerchief tied at your throat and a chatelaine at your waist when a quick change is required. A vest and skirt made of wool jersey is an excellent investment when fall is in the air.

* These "Skintees" are just what they sound like—panties that fit like a glove and never show a ripple even under your clingingest dance dress. They are sold packaged in cellophane and come in small, medium and large sizes. Colors are either tea rose or white. They're guaranteed not to run, and the price is sixty-five cents.

* "Shoulders make the man" is an old saying. But every woman knows that a well rounded shoulder will give her costume that "couturiere" look. There are shoulder pads in the stores that will wash with soap and water and retain their original shape. They're called Gerry Nufoam pads and contain 90% air. Covered in light and dark shades of taffeta these pads sell at about $2.00 a pair.

* Having a baby? You're awfully lucky and if there are moments when you yearn for your "once little" waistline, be cheered by the new maternity clothes. They play up your pretty face and neck with lingerie collars, jewelry necklaces and interesting sleeves. And one of the maternity lines is showing an excellent skirt. It is cut out under the stomach so it always hangs gracefully. Shop carefully if you're having a baby and even your best friend will say "Why, I never knew."

Enjoy the comfort of this slimming "Perma-lift" Pantie Girdle. All elastic leg sections comfortably control hips and thighs. Best of all, this wonderful pantie won't ride up. Hollywood Tour

After a leisurely breakfast, Shirley suggests a walk through the hotel, which is practically a miniature city. You nod a greeting at Errol Flynn, Walter Pidgeon and other famous movie folk, getting in a few sets of tennis before lunch — and spy Ginger Rogers and Eleanor Powell in one of the shops — Eleanor looks so happy to be home again after her successful dancing engagements in the East. You wander around — just plain rubber-necking, but so-o-o relaxing and in such good company.

Before you know it, it’s time for lunch. Where else but the Brown Derby? Shirley chuckles when you mention the quirkiness of autograph fans outside the Derby and stops a moment to sign their books. John grins but also signs. Inside a long line of would-be diners, waiting for tables. Lucky you — your table was reserved in advance. A waitress in a charming balloon parachute skirt takes your order — you’ve decided on a Derby special, scrambled eggs and tomatoes. You’re not disappointed when it arrives. Food for gods — and the stars.

It’s Shirley who suggests you have your dessert out at Wil Wright’s Ice Cream Parlor — emporium of frozen delight next door to LaRue’s. Shirley confides that ice cream is her favorite dessert, and that she and John often go to Wil Wright’s after lunching or dining out.

Wil Wright’s, with its peppermint-stick pole outside and merry-go-round roof, could only happen in Hollywood. It was opened about three months before the war — when three young men decided good ice cream would sell anywhere. When war broke out these boys traded their ice cream paddles for guns and went into the service. Nothing, however, keeps good ice cream down, so when they opened up again out on the Strip, their ice cream (secret formula) became the rage of Hollywood.

Joan Crawford, Joan Caulfield, Gail Patrick and Judy Garland are among the many who may be seen at Wright’s at most any time of the day or night. Eddie Cantor sends this ice cream to his daughter in New York. Hollywood stars down in Mexico find themselves dreaming of Wright’s and have the cream sent down air express.

How about a movie? Shirley asks. So off you go to Grauman’s Chinese Theater on Hollywood Boulevard. This pagoda-like building is a Hollywood landmark. Foot-prints of famous stars, both past and present, are immortalized in cement. Shirley delightfully shows John her footprints — he had never seen them. She tried fitting her foot into the impression made when she was a child star but, small as it is, her foot didn’t fit the original print. Recently Grauman’s asked Shirley to make another impression beside the original one, and if she does she will be the first actress in Hollywood to have her footprints done in cement twice — once as a child star and later as a grown-up.

You invest in several bags of popcorn, and then into deep restful seats to watch the latest flicker. When you come out it’s late afternoon. John suggests eating at The Tropics. Shirley tells you that ever since she can remember she has been going to The Tropics at least once a week for dinner — first with her mother and father, and afterward with John. You eat outdoors. There’s wonderful Chinese food in an oriental setting of bamboo tables, leis of flowers for the guests, palm trees, soft music. In this romantic setting you can appreciate why Sugie is known as the Cinema Cupid.

And now it’s time to bid your hosts goodbye. Shirley and John assure you they have enjoyed their “Tour” as much as you. Shirley says that even though she has lived in Hollywood for years, she always finds something exciting and new about the places you have visited.

City & State

"I can't sleep," Judy admits frankly. That's one way of starting a nervous breakdown.

The sooner Judy stops making pictures with her very excellent director-mate, the happier she'll be. The same goes for Vincente. Because their movies have become more important than their marriage.

Something very similar happened with Rita Hayworth and Orson Welles. Next to Judy, Rita, when she was working with Orson in "The Lady from Shanghai," was the tensest person you've ever seen in your life. She'd collapse in her dressing room at least once a day. "Orson and I never stop talking about the picture, day or night," she wailed.

Once when I visited her on the set, it was the birthday of her two-year-old daughter, Rebecca. Four o'clock came.

"Aren't you going to the party?" I asked Rita, who was pacing up and down the set like a caged kitten.

"I don't know, I don't know," she said with an appealing glance at Orson.

At four-thirty he let her go—and added, "Don't forget to be back here at seven!" No wonder, when Rita finally escaped, she screamed, "I just couldn't stand his genius any longer."

And that raises the question, are husbands and wives in Hollywood taking too much of a chance with their marriages by working together? You'd naturally think that there would be fewer hazards to a Hollywood marriage under such circumstances, because husband and wife would have a close and common interest, and perhaps even more important, there wouldn't be the danger of romantic attachments elsewhere. Nevertheless, see what happened to Red Skelton and his former wife, Edna, his writer and manager.

"Too much work and not enough marriage," Red explained when they called it a day. "When I go home at night, I don't want to talk shop. I want to make love to my wife." Now they both go home to someone else—Red to Georgia, and Edna to Frank Borzage. As a result they like each other as persons a great deal more and do better work together because now they don't quarrel. They had to choose between work and marriage, and they chose work.

Sue and Alan Ladd made the opposite decision. You know, of course, that Sue "discovered" Alan and got him started in Hollywood. And for a while after their marriage, Sue continued to work as Alan's agent. I saw them in New York on their honeymoon. At that time Sue made the startling statement, "I'm selling out as Alan's agent. I want to be his wife, not his agent. That's for someone else, not his wife." In due course Sue sold her for $50,000. She could have held on and made $30,000 a year. Today Alan and Sue and their two children are among the happiest family units in Hollywood.

Of course, it's hard to predict about any Hollywood marriage, but Deanna Durbin and Felix Jackson have a much better chance of keeping their marriage intact, now that Felix has said "goodbye" to Deanna's career. Their working life was not a success. Felix was Deanna's producer, and he gave her bad-girl roles and tried to make her a sophisticate. Deanna is at her best, and always will be, playing nice girls on the screen. She looks wholesome and healthy, and anything else is wrong. So before Deanna could blame her mate for her pictures, he walked out... of her career. As of this writing, the rumors of marital breakup have ceased.

But Maria Montez and Jean Pierre Aumont are proof that some husbands and wives can work together—and stay married. Perhaps because Maria is an unabashed exhibitionist. When they co-starred in “Atlantis,” they made love all over the set, in and out of the scenes.

“It’s a crime to take the money,” grinned Jean Pierre, who nevertheless pocketed his $75,000. “Jean Pierre is the most wonderful actor and the best husband in the world,” said Maria between kisses.

Roz Russell can take it—that is, she can take her husband, Fred Brisson—at work and at play. Roz and Fred are two of the partners in Independent Artists, a company formed nine months ago to star Roz in one picture a year and to make three others with Roz and Fred as producers. Well, they’re still married! Of course, they haven’t really come to grips yet with a twenty-four-hour-a-day working schedule. Give them a year after they make their first picture together. Then we’ll see.

GINGER ROGERS and her Jackie Briggs are in the same star-producer working boat—so are Joan Fontaine and her producer-mate William Dozier. It’s an odd thing about gals who work with their husbands. They seem to find it difficult to get their pictures rolling. Ginger and Jackie have been hemming and hawing for a year now—and they haven’t yet started “Wild Calendar,” which Briggs is to produce with Ginger as the star.

And Miss Fontaine. For six months she and Producer Dozier made every kind of plan to begin “Thunder on the Hill” with Joan starred. Then it was postponed indefinitely. Can it be that pictures planned in the office are scrapped in the bedroom? It’s easy to talk yourself out of a good idea.

There’s Teresa Wright and her husband Niven Busch. Niven produced as well as wrote “Pursued.” Teresa’s picture with Robert Mitchum. I was on the set when Niven decided to cut one of Teresa’s big scenes. She burst into tears and production was suspended for the day. But she must have put in some good homework because the scene was back in next day!

Lauren Bacall says flatly that she doesn’t want to work unless it’s with her husband Humphrey Bogart. Otherwise she’d just as soon retire and be a wife only. And she’s right, because Bogey is not an egomaniac. He’s really anxious for his wife to be a success on the screen. In their last picture, “Dark Passage,” you see little of Bogey. It’s all Bacall. As long as he keeps that up, their working and married partnership is bound to be a success.

The same goes for Merle Oberon and her cameraman husband, Lucien Ballard. Merle and Lucien “sell” themselves as “a package.” If you want Merle, you have to take Lucien. And vice versa. So far this has worked fine. Because not only is Merle protected on the camera angles but, unlike Linda Darnell and her cameraman mate, Pev Marley, Merle and Lucien work at the same time and are always free to vacation at the same time.

June Allyson wants to make pictures with Dick Powell. “It’s the dream of my life,” she’s always telling me. But she’s so happily married that it would seem a shame to run the risk.

It’s one that John Payne refuses to take. “An actor must watch out for himself,” explains John honestly. “And Gloria wouldn’t understand—especially if it interfered with her role.”

So there you have it. With some it works—with most it doesn’t. So why take the chance? Would you?

The End
The Saga of Jennifer

After seeing Katharine Cornell in "Wingsless Victory" some five times, Jennifer wrote her for advice on how to become an actress and will never forget her answer. "There's only one way to become an actress . . . and that's never to give up trying to be one."

"I've never forgotten that," Jennifer has said since. "I'm still trying to follow it."

Today directors talk about how Jennifer virtually "lives" every part while she's playing it, fairly breathing her own life into it. She always has. So much so that once during a school play when she was supposed to take poison, she played the scene so realistically some children jumped up from their seats yelling, "Don't let her take it—don't let her!" When the curtain fell they were sure she was dead.

This same sincerity later prompted Director Henry King to say that among the various stars he tested for "The Song of Bernadette," only Jennifer actually saw the Vision. "In twenty years as a director I've worked with many fine actresses, but few inspired ones. And she is inspired," former French teacher, Marie Cicquel Barrett, who first brought the book to Jennifer's attention and urged her to try for the part, remembers many "inspiring" performances Jennifer used to give on a bus tour in the back yard of her home in Tulsa. Nobody had more faith in her future than this French teacher and Jennifer's first dramatist teacher, Mrs. Irene Kendle. It was of the latter that Jennifer said, when she first came to Hollywood, "She taught me everything I know."

Curiously enough, all this absorption in what must have seemed to others a make-believe world was cut off her by Jennifer's having friends. A great deal of it was due to the qualities of the girl herself. Jennifer's greatest desire always was to be just one of the "gang."

Certainly her native generosity of spirit was an important factor in cementing lifelong friendships. When she was chosen May Queen for her class at Monte Cassino, she said unhappily to her best friend, Ruth Bowers King, "This is silly, I don't want it. You should be queen." Not until years later did Jennifer's other good friend, Mary Birmingham, discover how she had become class valedictorian. Originally Jennifer had been asked to accept the honor but she refused in her friend's favor, saying quickly, "Let Mary do it. I'm doing so many things."

Unlike the other girls in their gang—"The Toppers," they called themselves—Jennifer cared little about social events. "Dates bored her to death," says Mary. "Whenever she went out with us she took the whole crowd by storm and was always the most popular, but she just didn't care for anything but acting."

When the other girls daydreamed about the future, Jennifer agreed they'd get married when they were twenty-five.

"Not me," Jennifer would break in. "I'm going to wait until I'm thirty-five!"

"Then Phyl was the first in our gang to get married," they laugh now.

In those days, Jennifer liked to stop by Wolferman's store and buy candied apples, getting the steering wheel all sticky as she alternated between driving and eating the rest of the way home. A special lark in those days meant going on a hamburger binge. She would have a friend over to spend the night and, instead of raiding the icebox when they got hungry, they'd make sure the rest of the household was asleep, dress and go buy a sack full of hamburgers, then drive out to a country road, park and eat their whole sackful and listen to the car radio.

The close association of the girls was broken temporarily when the Monte Cassino days were over, and it was time to go on to college. Jennifer entered Texas University, but Jennifer after careful study chose Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, because of its excellent drama department. However, they were inseparable during vacation periods. Once when Ruth had two more days of vacation than she, Jennifer deliberately missed her train back to Northwestern so that they could drive out into the country to listen to a无线 broadcast together.

At Northwestern Jennifer met David Bruce, whose name was then Andy McBratyn. It was to mark a new era for both of them. Bruce, inspired by Jennifer's enthusiasm, returned with her to play leads in the stock company which Papa Isley had finally been persuaded to back when he realized it was useless to try to dissuade his daughter from a career of acting. The "Mansfield Players" was directed by Richard Mansfield Dickinson and Jennifer, of course, was its leading lady.

But make no mistake about it, she carried her end of the load, as Dickinson himself would gladly tell you. They travelled by automobiles during that hot summer, with the scenery lumbering along in a truck ahead of them. Though her father owned the company, Jennifer never ducked any of the hard work. She helped put up scenery, painted, cleaned up the stage and worked props. Her parents usually joined them whenever they were playing on weekends and brought their laundry, which they'd send back to Tulsa by them the week before.

Jennifer worked up quite a rolling repertoi re in "The Family Upstairs," "This Thing Called Love" and "Smilin' Through," which latter she particularly enjoyed because of its dramatic depths and haunting love scenes.

But opening night of her first "professional" engagement with the Mansfield Players was anything but auspicious for Jennifer. She fluffed some lines of "This Thing Called Love" and further disgraced herself in her own eyes by knocking over a lamp and breaking it. She was completely crushed. She wanted to pay for the broken prop out of her own allowance and it took the combined persuasion of her parents and all members of the cast to get her back on stage again the next night.

She's still extremely self-critical about her own work, magnifies out of proportion any small failure, and studies any lukewarm reviews conscientiously, saying, "They're very helpful to me."

ALL these years the remembrance of Broadway and Ruth Draper's name in brilliant lights had been locked away in Jennifer's mind like a precious jewel. The time was not at hand when she must get to New York to learn more of her chosen career. Under her persistent campaign, Mother and Dad Isley finally broke down and agreed to her attending the American Academy of Dramatic Arts.

There she met the tall, lanky youth from Utah who was to become her husband. They were a match for each other in enthusiasm and impetuosity. What more natural than that in due course Jennifer should carry him back home to Tulsa to do a dramatic radio series with her? Thus listeners of KOME were presently taking in their stride the earnest young voices of Phylis Isley and Robert Walker on a half-hour dramatic show Sunday afternoons. Jennifer was insistent that the scripts have two equally good leads. "Bob has so much more talent than I have," she would say.

Jennifer's sudden decision to marry Bob was part of the pattern of her impulsiveness—and at the same time of her natural reserve. A girl generally confines her romantic plans to her best friend, but even Ruth King had no idea of what was brewing until a week before the wedding.

They were married early one morning at the Christ's King Church. It was a private family wedding with only some ten people present. Jennifer wore a Peter Pan-ish hat with high crown and a red velvet suit, which she used to say brought her luck.

This optimism was undoubtedly prompted by the fact that after she and Bob had decided to shake the dust of Oklahomas from their feet and try their luck in Hollywood, Jennifer had succeeded in getting a job at Republic Studios. Her first screen role was with John Wayne. Then she appeared in the "Dick Tracy" series. There was even talk of teaming her with Roy Rogers.

But things weren't going well for Bob. New York might be a chance for both of them. So the Walkers bundled their possessions into their car and headed East.

The rest is a twice-told tale. How after a struggle Bob began to find success in radio, while Jennifer kept house and bore their two children, Michael and Bobby, just eleven months apart. How Jennifer walked in cold to read for David O. Selznick and came out with a contract, thereafter to enter upon a period of intensive study under his coaches. How the call came for her to go to Hollywood to prepare for "The Song of Bernadette" and Bob landed a Metro contract.

But the luck of the red velvet wedding suit was beginning to fade. About the how and why, Jennifer and Bob have always been silent. But most of Hollywood could take lessons in the conversational loyalties each has displayed where the other is concerned and in the manner in which they've worked together to keep their separation from being any more painful than necessary to their two children. And it's no secret that during his publicized "disappearance," when the studio was alarmed over his absence, Jennifer drove back to Hollywood alone early in the morning from her vacation at Delmar to get the latest news of him.

MEANTIME, "The Song of Bernadette" had hurtled a new star across the Hollywood sky. But the girl from Oklahoma couldn't face the labyrinth of a Hollywood opening. Clothes, photographers, reporters, dinners, parties and the awful moment when she would have to walk the red carpet between the rows of premier bleachers, with the microphone raising its slender neck like a snake about to strike.

She would save her first taste of success to share with her friends at the Southwestern premiere which was held in her hometown.

With her two boys, she climbed aboard the train for Tulsa, the black toadstool she'd bought for her Hollywood debut as a star tucked away in her bag. The studio had offered to send a maid along but Jennifer declined. They started out with a nine box lunch which was promptly unopened on the floor. And the problem of keeping the boys safe together in their upper berth in the drawing room was almost too much. "How!" she laughed when her father and Ruth King met her at the Kansas City station to accompany her home.

The town turned out to meet her when the train pulled in. "I'm so glad to be here I could almost die," Jennifer said.

She wore a yellow and brown tweed suit, alligator pumps, and carried a large felt hat that impressed the members of "The Toppers" there to greet her. "She never used to even own one," they said.

But she was the same "Phyl!" they'd always known. The only reference she made to her new screen status was when signing an autograph. "I never could make a Lennon! — the only one I have to make two of them," she laughed.

Huge banners saying "Welcome, Jennifer Jones" were strung across Main Street. Giant posters of Norman Rockwell's painting of her in the character of Bernadette stood high on the corner of the First National Bank and in the window of a local department store. Two others, six by eighteen feet, were mounted over the marquee of the Ritz Theatre for the premiere.

That night Jennifer saw her childhood dream come true. Her name fairly blazed in lights over Fourth and Main Streets. Tulsa's "Little Times Square," while on the sidelines hundreds of home-towners applauded the new star who was born.

It was thrilling, breath-taking—but not terrifying like a Hollywood premiere.

Even today she still has to brace herself for a function like the "Duel in the Sun" premiere. You see her step out of the limousine and pause politely for the cameramen. But her hands are trembling. She hurries as quickly as possible down the last red mile of carpet, body tense, looking neither right nor left until she reaches the haven inside the theater. It's her night to take bows but, being Jennifer, she can't. Perhaps it is this same tension and reserve which has prevented her from making many Hollywood friends. Then again, her loyalty to her Tulsa chums may be responsible. A more practical explanation is her complete devotion to her work which has confined her to those connected with it—hairdressers, make-up people and most particularly Anita Colby who was Selznick's directress of women stars and who now is like a sister to her.

TODAY Jennifer is one of the hardest-working stars in Hollywood. As evidenced by her performance of the pearls of Pearl in "Duel in the Sun," which would have tired any serial queen. Jennifer admits by way of understatement that it was "the most vigorous thing I've ever done."

She climbed over Arizona cactus and rocky crags with a gun in her hand until her arms and hands were scratched and bleeding, her fingernails broken and torn. She spent hours at a time in slimy water for those sump scenes in which she was supposed to be shivering with cold and blue from the chill. And she says, "I was cold and blue. It was no feat of acting."

She has the same eager enthusiasm she's always had. Jennifer has finally found herself a home. A beautiful pink stucco French Riviera style out in Brentwood, furnished in rich colors that make a perfect background for Jennifer's own rich coloring, her gold-brown eyes, pink cheeks and gleaming wealth of dark brown hair. She had it redecorated while she was in New York on location with "Portrait of Jennie" and was so eager to know how the place was coming, she wanted photographs sent her of the various rooms.

Her young sons took an active interest in the redecoration too, "We want funny things over our bathtub," they told their mother before she left. And they got them. Murals featuring two little boys in a boat.

There are those who think this is the home Jennifer is preparing against the time when she and David O. Selznick may be man and wife after his marital problems have been cleared up. Whatever the outcome, the mutual faith of Hollywood's brilliant star-maker and his sensitive star continues to write screen history.

Today back in Tulsa there stands a lifesized statue of Jennifer in the role of Bernadette. Against a background of lilac bushes and her native Oklahoma dogwood, the statue is an inspiration to other ambitious home-town girls to remember the story of a girl named Jones.

The Shadow Stage

(Continued from page 8) veteran Gene’s problem about his war bride, Marie McDonald. A young war widow, Phyllis Thaxter, who looks very down-to-earth in an exceedingly glamorous fashion—no mean accomplishment—helps them both in both dilemmas.

Most of the details you can enjoy and then check off—especially that figure of McDonald’s, that nice honest, selling look of Thaxter’s and the dancing of Mr. Kelly. His feet must certainly have touched that Blanney Stone!

Your Reviewer Says: Mild film with major dancing.

✓ The Romance of Rosy Ridge (M-G-M)

A FEUD about the color of britches down in the Ozarks can raise an awful lot of hullabaloo, especially when that genial Van Johnson is involved. It won’t come out and say whether he’s for the blue or the gray. As you may remember from your history books, those colors had a lot to do with the Civil War, especially in the in-between Ozarks where these goings-on occur.

The war’s over and farmer Thomas Mitchell is waiting for his son to “home himself,” which means schoolmaster Van Johnson, takes over the chores, takes over daughter Janet Leigh, too. In this process some delightful dialogues comes along. If this is how they talk in the Ozarks, they should get out a special book of poetry. Van fits into his patched britches readily, twirls his words around some real music and does his best to bring the North-South aftermath of the war to a good end. There’s one Ninny Nat who, in person of O. A. Whitehead, is about the best Ozarkian in the picture; plus that, there’s Thomas Mitchell looking strong-minded.

Rosy Ridge is a very pleasant place; the people are nice, too. You’ll like them all and the easy way the uncommon little story runs along.

Your Reviewer Says: Rosy Romance.

✓ Variety Girl (Paramount)

PARAMOUNT went and found itself a novel little idea—the founding of the famous Variety Club, that “heart of show business,” and the story of the first baby it fostered. She’s Mary Hatcher who comes out to Hollywood to get into films—at Paramount, of course. On goes the bright green light for all the Paramount stars, from Ladd to Lake, to come stepping high into the picture, with Hope and Crosby being Hope and Crosby all over the place and leading the ingenious parade.

Mary manages to get herself mixed up with all sorts of people, so you’ll be seeing stars all evening. You won’t be blinded by them—it’s all handled so deftly it seems the most natural act in the Hollywood world. The Variety Club comes for its share at the end and there are some specialty numbers, a "Puppetoon" sequence and Miss Hatcher to look at and listen to. Right along with Mary and her nice singing voice on this tour goes one Olga San Juan who clowns around for dear life; you’d have to be just too sophisticated not to laugh at her.

Nobody set out to make anything Big out of this so you can just settle down and enjoy a real "Variety" show.

Your Reviewer Says: All the stars and a different kind of fun.
Lured (Stromberg-UA)

THIS IS supposed to have some deep dark secrets hidden in its reels, but it's all fairly handsome hokum. Take that scene where mad artist Boris Karloff is out after the blonde scalp of Lucille Ball and the dark figure lurks on the balcony.

George Sanders is his usual man-about-town, but he doesn't give enough punch to his women-catching this time. Lucille Ball, as the American working for "The Yard" to clear up the murders of some beautiful girls, is too light-of-heart to send any chills running up your spine.

It's not boring and you'll bear up fairly well under it, but add it all up and you'll find a papier-mâché mystery that's cracking under the strain.

Your Reviewer Says: A light-weight.

Heaven Only Knows (Nebenzal-UA)

THE ARCHANGEL MICHAEL has to pull all the heavenly strings he knows when he gets mixed up with some tough guys out in old Montana. Robert Cummings wears his invisible wings well—so well he unfortunately seems like any good fellow who's doing his best to straighten out the very crooked life of Brian Donlevy. Pistas fly, dice roll, guns flash and Mr. Donlevy gets reformed, but not until after Michael has had to work a couple of miracles.

The opening scene is "Up There," with every one wearing benign expressions and frock coats, but within two wafts of a spiritual hand, we're all down to earth in a film that's just another Western. Donlevy uses his fists with no effort—the role asks for no effort from him. Jorja Curt- right is too much the tempestuous exotic to seem like a spiritual schoolmarm. A light touch of love—this brother would have made the "different" Western; the studied religious dramatics in this is just too much for the film's lightweight shoulders.

Your Reviewer Says: Archangels, stay 'way from the West.

Saddle Pals (Republic)

 Into THIS Autry episode comes that lurking villain, Gene. Gene can beat him lots easier than other people since he has a calm disposition and Champion Jr. to race around on. He also has the Cass County Boys to keep him placid, with the Cass County Boys to keep him placid, with the Cass County Boys to keep him placid.

To beat that villain landlord, Gene has to deal with spoiled young lady Lynne Roberts, calm Sterling Holloway out of a very exaggerated nervous breakdown, and get a Big Idea. He does all three, which undoubtedly will delight all the Autry fans.

Your Reviewer Says: Autry canters along.

Deep Valley (Warner)

THE VALLEY'S beautiful, but that's about all that is in this dreary episode about a broken-down family—daughter Ida Lupino and Fen Bainter and Henry Hull. They're queer sort of people. Fay and Henry haven't seen each other for years though they live in the same house; poor Ida has trouble talking—and no wonder, since there's nothing around her worth talking about.

Everything changes, though. Before you can snap your fingers, Ida gets a glimpse of Dane Clark and overnight she's chattering away like a magpie. Mama and Papa suddenly decide to become as chummy as Darby and Joan; and Ida gets some new dresses. Then, before you're used to all this sunshine-and-light, everybody's grim...

along about the life of the famous composer Joe E. Howard. It has the fine hand of Producer George E. Jessel to keep it humming, Mark Stevens as Howard and June Haver, Lenore Aubert and Martha Stewart a pretty and dimpled trio playing the women in his turn-of-the-century life.

The whole business has a lift to it—from the old songs that are still echoing around today, to Reginald Gardiner’s occurring and the high-kicking, lace-gartered frivolities of Miss Stewart.

Stevens is an acceptable Howard, the piano-playing guy who was to compose songs that would be hummed for four generations. His romance-dotted life was a natural for a good musical; the black-lace era in which he lived was just what the doctor ordered for good entertainment. The role of Fyrit Barrington fell like a plum into the hands of Lenore Aubert who handles it to pretty perfection; all the music-filled cavortings are going to look pleasant to any light-hearted audience.

Your Reviewer Says: What you like in a musical.

Ivy (20th Century-Fox)

"Ivy" doesn't give you as many chills as she should. There she is—a Joan Fontaine making eyes at rich Herbert Marshall who can give her all the frills and frowns she wants and in the meantime planning to poison poor husband Richard Ney. You’d think that watching her administer the lethal dose would have you on the end of the seat, but instead it's merely a sort of lukewarm pity you feel.

Joan does a good job with "Ivy," especially at the end, when she gives you a haunting idea of a woman in terror. Richard Ney is affable, Herbert Marshall distinguished as ordered and Patrie Knowles the malicious cast-aside lover.

There are lots of looks at pretty dresses, glimpses of old England—and also some scenes with Miss Fontaine’s mother. "Ivy" is evil enough to keep you interested, but not enough to be a shocker.

Your Reviewer Says: You'll go along with it.

WORLD’S STAR-MALLOCH

fast and funny Hollywood version of the Broadway hit. (Aug.)

DESERV. FURY—Paramount: Disregard this "Fury"—it’s nothing but a cryptically told tale of a lot of unpleasant people in the desert. Burt Lancaster is miscast, as is Mary Astor; Lisabeth Scott is certainly the most convincing romantic team. Big tries at big heroes degenerate into a soapstock. (Aug.)

DISHONORED LADY—Chertok-Stromberg-UA: Nothing new about this whole business except Hedy Lamar’s beauty. She still manages to look imperious even when she’s a nervous. John Loder tries to be a wolf and poor Dennis O’Keefe just doesn’t know what to make of the whole thing. (July)

DOWN TO EARTH—Columbia: Rita Hayworth comes down to earth with a bang. Teresa in a flashy dress tries to play the lead in Larry Parks’ musical. She sticks a celestial finger in the pie and almost spoils everything until Mr. Jordan straightens. Lots of songs and dances in Technicolor. (July)

DUEL IN THE SUN—Vanguard: Jennifer Jones loves two men—wildcat cow hands Ed (Robert Mitchum) and his even-keel brother Joseph Cotten way down in Texas. Its big-time overtones, plus Lillian Gish and Lionel Barrymore running things. Loretta is the servant Kat in Cotten’s home and what she does to the electorate makes an amusing make-believe action. (June)

FARMER’S DAUGHTER, THE—RKO: This is the way democratic politics should work, with Joseph Cotten, Loretta Young and Ethel Barrymore running things. Loretta is the servant Kat in Cotten’s home and what she does to the electorate makes an amusing make-believe brand of acting. (June)

GHOST AND MRS. MUIR, THE—20th Century-Fox: A different and diverting picture about ghost love to the idea. Mrs. Tierney Muiir moving to live in his former home. He haunts her; they get romantic; George Sanders gets delightfully wofish, Edna Best and Vanessa Brown are there, along with bright comedy touches. (Aug.)

GHOST GOES WILD, THE—Republic: Everybody else goes wild in this one. Old scholar and buhler Edward Everett Horton walks around in sheets while “The Gwyne” rugs around the turn-Donnelly isn’t scared; you won’t be either. (July)

GREAT EXPECTATIONS—Universal-International: You won’t be disappointed for a single minute by this English film of Dickens’ immortal novel. A “young man of great expectations” falls heir to a fortune, leads a life of romance and mystery. It has everything needed for a box-office winner plus John Mills and Valerie Hobson. (July)

GREEN FOR DANGER—Eagle-Lion: Abastair Sim and Inspector Cask are caught up in a murderous mix-up with white-clad detective Trevor Howard and Leo Cullmod making good suspects. Rosamund John and John Gielgud are the British couple’s good enough to give you shivers if you’re a mystery-lover. (Aug.)

HIGH BARBAREE—M-G-M: A money-maker with two fan-favorite blondes, Jean Hanyson and Allyson, who start out as a little boy and girl dreaming about a fabulous life. High Barbaree, now a top Hollywood star, takes lots of bony incidents in an Iowa town, the war and Thomas Mitchell to get the two on the right road to the heights. (June)

HIT PARADE OF 1947—Republic: Headliners of the entertainment world: Joan Edwards, Eddie Al-ber, Constance Moore and Gill Lang turn in another musical take show business isn’t that hard to take. Woody Herman and his orchestra swing in; Roy Rogers has a guest spot. (June)

HOMESTEADERS OF PARADISE VALLEY—Republic: Allan Lane as Red Ryder has to clean up a lot of trouble in a Western valley with the help of Little Rover and Andy Today. (July)

HOMESTRETCH, THE—20th Century-Fox: Cornel Wilde is called upon to set as a horse-brained waster in a film about horses and race tracks. The racing is unimportant. There are some amusing problems of Wilde and Maureen O’Hara less so. (July)

HONEYMOON—RKO: An attempt at some fun with Shirley Temple trying to catch up with soldier God on a romantic horse in Mexico; Gable in order to marry her and Franchot Tone trying to catch up with her zany dog. It has colorful shots of flowers and serapes but the comedy doesn’t quite come off. (July)

HAPPENED IN BROOKLYN—M-G-M: As perky goings-on in Brooklyn as you’d want with genial Frank Sinatra as the pewveteran who meets up with music teacher Kathryn Grayson. Jimmy Durante has a perfectly lovely role. (Aug.)

a film that's just a time-passer. It has to do with a psychology professor who thinks women should be pushed around and a girl repulsively hunches him around instead. Brian Donley helps things. (July)

UNFAITHFUL, THE.—Warner. Hard-to-get and suspended, this has Ann Sheridan doing a good job as the week-old bride whose husband Zachary Scott goes overseas for three years. Suspense leads to a murder charge with Lew Ayres as the lawyer. Troubled movie-goers will like it. (Aug.)

WELCOME STRANGER—Paramount: Everyone takes it easy—sings gaily, Stephen Marlowe's Capid and Joan Caulfield acts the pretty foil. The plot helps pleasantly as a target for a city doctor's sojourn in a Maine village. (June)

WINTER WONDERLAND—Republic: There's a ski festival starring Lynne Roberts and Charles Drake, a daring rescue from a cave, and a ski champ taking in this innocuous tale about life in a winter resort. If you're a winter-sports enthusiast, you may enjoy the mild goings-on. (July)

WYOMING—Republic: Big rancher, Bill Elliott fights the Homestead Act, but daughter Vera Ralston and John Carroll think the law's right. This runs according to the simplicity that the西部 trail with Albert Dekker, Mme. Ospenskaya. (Aug.)

CAMAY THE SOAP OF BEAUTIFUL WOMEN
"You make a lovely couple, Pet!"

GIRL: Me and the Falls, you mean?
CUPID: Who else? Funny thing, though, some girls come here with husbands. Honeymooning, I think they call it. But, of course, they're girls with sparkling smiles.
GIRL: Listen, my fine feathered fiend, if I could coax a little sparkle into my smile, I would, believe me!
GIRL: I brush my teeth regularly, but all I get is—CUPID: Maybe some "pink" on your tooth brush?

GIRL: Bright, aren't you... and what's a little "pink" in my young life?
CUPID: Grow up, youngster. "Pink" is a sign to see your dentist. He'll tell you what's behind it. And if it turns out to be simply a case of soft foods robbing your gums of exercise, he may suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and gentle massage."

GIRL: Fine, fine... but by what higher mathematics does all this add up to one big, bright smile?
CUPID: Elementary, my dear witless. Sparkling smiles depend largely on firm, healthy gums. So, if your dentist advises massage, go to it, gal. 9 out of 10 dentists today do recommend gum massage... regularly or in special cases, according to a just-completed nationwide survey.
And what's more, they prefer Ipana Tooth Paste 2 to 1 for their own personal use.

HOW TO MASSAGE YOUR GUMS. Gently massage at the gum line, always keeping fingertip in contact with the tooth surface. It's at the gum line, where teeth and gums meet, that so many troubles start — where gentle massage can be so helpful. Between regular visits to your dentist, help him guard your smile of beauty.
Every few years we get the Ten Best craze. You know—what ten books would you like to take to a desert island? What ten films? What ten girls?

The last time we had it was when "Mrs. Miniver" was released. Everybody sent in his or hers-best list.

Now we've got it again. We've seen M-G-M's "Song of Love" and we're going to tell you about it. In turn, when you've seen it, we want you to tell us.

We want you to list the TEN BEST LOVE STORIES EVER PRODUCED. And then we want to see where you classify "Song of Love".

To us, "Song of Love" is the tenth most exciting love story we could have seen this year. It's almost the story of love itself—the kind of love that sings in the heart.

Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker are in it. Katharine plays a young piano virtuoso; Paul and Robert are two young composers. For her part, she wrote immortal music; for her heart both would have given their lives.

M-G-M has caught the tenderness and the joy, the inspiration and the intimate details of their three-way friendship. Caught them, and set them to unforgettable music.

There's a wonderful supporting cast: Leo G. Carroll, Henry Daniell, Henry Stephenson, and others.

Clarence Brown, who brightened your life with "National Velvet" and "The Yearling", is both director and producer. Ivan Tors, Ingard Von Cube, Allen Vincent and Robert Ardrey did the screenplay.

You're invited to send in your list of love stories to Leo, c/o M-G-M, 1540 Broadway, New York 19, N. Y. We want to hear from you—whether you include "Song of Love" or not.

We think you will.

P.S.: A few titles to get your "Song of Love" started:

- A Farewell to Arms
- A Guy Named Joe
- Camille
- Cavalcade
- Dark Victory
- Flesh and the Devil
- Goldlight
- Gone With The Wind
- It Happened One Night
- The Philadelphia Story
- White Cliff's of Dover

A CLARENCE BROWN PRODUCTION with LEO G. CARROLL • HENRY DANIELL • HENRY STEPHENSON

Screen Play by IVAN TORS, IRMAGARD VON CUBE & ALLEN VINCENT & ROBERT ARDREY • Produced and Directed by CLARENCE BROWN A METRO-GOLDWYN-MAYER PICTURE
Start asking questions of yourself about your sense of justice; you'll need the answers after you've seen this picture. First of all, it's an excellent movie with some excellent acting by Robert Young, Robert Mitchum and Robert Ryan. That trio takes a film on the tough subject of intolerance and makes it into an A1 success. Mitchum and Ryan play two soldiers in the same outfit but far apart on their ideas. Young is the lawyer who solves the murder—and also thereby exposes some American history, past and current, of which all Americans can be ashamed. Some sentences are spoken that have never been whispered in movies before; some ideas are expounded that have hitherto been kept under cover as too "delicate" ground; and some prototypes of bad Americans appear that will have you asking those questions we mentioned. This sticks to the facts; it's a plain film about plain people—Protestant, Catholic and Jew. Young William Phipps as the bewildered Leroy can start holding out his hand for congratulations, too—he turns in a fine performance in a small role. You're not going to be preached at, make no mistake; instead, you're going to be intrigued by every reel in this fine movie.

Your Reviewer Says: Are you guilty?

Crossfire

Robert Ryan and Robert Young appeal to your sense of justice in this fine film

Danny Kaye has the time of his life dating with dream girl Virginia Mayo

The gypsy in her attracts British agent Ray Milland, to Marlene Dietrich

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty (Goldwyn)

A very short story by James Thurber turns into a very funny idea for Danny Kaye. He takes Walter Mitty, that bashful henpecked little fellow who lives a life of vicarious thrills in his daydreams, adds some special Kaye touches and turns him out as the leader of the month's laugh parade. The hero in his life cackle around to perfection in the form of mother Fay Bainter, fiancée Ann Rutherford, and prospective mother-in-law Florence Bates. They're the reason for his escapist dreams that will have you thinking one Thurber had one Kaye in mind when he wrote his piece.

You're going to laugh all up and down the scale at Walter turned sea captain, drawing Southern gentleman, two-fisted cowboy. The hearty thanks go to the deft Kaye, playing away in his special field for dear life, with Virginia Mayo as the best-turned dream girl in any man's mind.

Some Thurber addicts may look down their noses a little at those liberties—such as Boris Karloff—Hollywood has taken with his plot, but they'd do better just to sit back and watch Danny take the lead on the take-off list. There are two Kaye acts—"Symphony for Unstrung Tongue" and "Anatole of Paris;" how ardently you are about this Kaye talent may decide whether or no you think they—and the picture—are a little on the long side. We'll take a bet you'll come out shouting for more.

Your Reviewer Says: Meet Walter and pin a medal on him.

Golden Earrings (Paramount)

When Quentin Reynolds, played in bighearted fashion by himself, sees that British Colonel Ray Milland's ears are pierced, he scents out a story, tracks down Ray and gets not only his man but an earful. "There's a woman involved," says Ray; whereupon you meet up with Marlene Dietrich, a gypsy roaming around pre-war Germany. You'll know Miss Dietrich by her throaty humming; you may not know her by her clothes. She plays her gypsy straight, showing off a famous gam in only one scene. Milland does the same with his intelligence-agent role.

The one drawback to this novel angle is that the picture can't seem to make up its mind whether to be a straight comedy about the adventures of a dignified British with an amorous gypsy or to turn into a serious drama about poison gas, Nazis. Aside from this, you'll probably get a light touch of entertainment from it, especially when you find yourself in a gypsy camp where Murvyn Vye, late of "Oklahoma," is giving off with some gypsy tunes.

It's different enough to give you a new slant; a dirty-faced Marlene Dietrich is still something to keep you staring. Milland and Bruce Lester are a competent team; and the whole show, provided you don't take it too seriously, is a fair enough time-passer.

Your Reviewer Says: Lend an ear.

Her Husband's Affairs (Columbia)

These are some affairs! There's that business about the miracle cream for an instantaneous shave that backfires, whereupon everyone starts sprouting beards. Then there's the up-and-down married life of Lucille Ball and Franchot Tone, that young couple in advertising, who get all tied up with boss Edward Everett Horton and all mixed up with a mad inventor. By now you should know what you're in for—a light touch of nonsense with some big laughs lighting everything up.

What goes on in between the laughs is sometimes on the slow side, but since the funny business is just silly enough to break down your dignity and make you chuckle out loud you're not going to care. Everything gets all mixed up with the greatest of ease and right in the middle in steps Larry Parks with his nice smile and some black whiskers—fair bonus in a good comedy.

Leave your cares and dignity with the baby sitter and go have some fun.

Your Reviewer Says: Good for a laugh any day.

Something in the Wind (Universal)

There's a faint—very faint—rustle of interest stirring around in this mild account of the troubles of Deanna Durbin, bowing in this time as a gal disk jockey eager for a sponsor and also eager to find out why John Dall thinks she was mixed up with his grandfather. The audience won't be quite so eager to figure out all the intricacies, which doesn't matter in the least as they're merely piled up there to serve as an excuse for Miss Durbin's singing. As usual, the fair Deanna comes forth with some forthright excellent songs—six of them catchy little tunes, the seventh a chuckleful duet with Jan Peerce in which both artists give Verdi everything he ever expected.

Ducking in and out between a sprightly Deanna and a morose Dall is that Donald O'Connor, back again with his backtalk and worth a half-dozen laughs. Charles Winninger lends himself to some funny business and Margaret Wycherly manages to make a possessive old lady look mired rather than downright hateful, no mean accomplishment.

We wish that this wind had blown in two other things: A good solid story for a Durbin film and a hat for Deanna that isn't a middle-aged matron model.

Your Reviewer Says: Take it for a song.

Merton of the Movies (M-G-M)

Merton's been hanging around the movies for a long time. As a matter of fact, this is the third time he's come around in pictures. Red Skelton takes him over—that naive hero of the early days of the film industry who figures he can take Hollywood by the tail. Hollywood does just that with him to turn out a nice little comedy on the slapstick side.

"Perils of Pauline" may have taken the edge off his view of the first flicker days, but Skelton, playing a sweet shy guy for a change, is still enough to carry you along, with Virginia O'Brien there to keep it all lighthearted and a lot of fun. Such characters as Leon Ames, Alan Mowbray and Gloria Grahame and such touches as Red in a coonskin cap are what you can expect; it's enough to make you feel Merton is certainly worth the price of admission.

Your Reviewer Says: Giddy but good.

Adventure Island (Paramount)

Rory Calhoun, that exclamation-point male, takes over the role in this Cinecolor version of Robert Louis Stevenson's adventure story, "Ebb Tide." Hanging onto his arm is the fair Rhonda Fleming; it must be said they're a nice young couple if not a very professional one. If their acting were up to their looks, you might get a rousing reaction to "Adventure Island," but since they're both a couple of unfinished youngsters all you find here is an innocuous piece about some deviltry on the high seas with Paul Kelly, John Abbott and Alan Napier adding their various touches to the fabulous story.

A South Sea Island and some pearls figure prominently and it's all as action-packed as its famous author would have wished. Adventurous young devils who like to play cops and robbers will find it enthralling; everyone will enjoy the fine features of Mr. Calhoun and Miss Fleming; but unfortunately the acting leaves too big a blank to be filled—even by a plot from the hand of Stevenson.

(Continued from page 6) you see everything through his eyes until after the doctor wields the scalpel, Lauren Bacall knows, though, since she's the one who finds him on the road and takes him trustingly into her apartment, figuring since her father died innocent in prison, Humphrey, wrong or right, must be spared the same fate.

Agnes Moorehead and Bruce Bennett are the two people who keep barging into the apartment where Humphrey is hidden and there's Clifton Young hanging around on his trail, too. The details are all slightly involved and there's really not much point in going into them because after you watch this trumped-up version of a convict's escape you're going to be muddled enough. Bacall and Bogart exchange their usual weighted glances, Agnes Moorehead gets vixenish with just too much drama and Bruce Bennett is a mild partner in this somewhat worthless foursome. The ending is hectic, pure and very simple; even though you like to think Lauren and Bogie will be happy ever after you just won't be able to take it like this.

Your Reviewer Says: Nothing to get steamed up about.

✓ Black Narcissus (Rank-Universal)

R E MEMBER Rumer Godden's strange book about some Protestant-Anglican nuns in a convent up in the Himalayas? J. Arthur Rank has taken over the nuns to show just what happened when they transported their community life to a place on a six-thousand-foot peak in India and began to feel the strange effects of this fairylike atmosphere. Deborah Kerr is his mother superior; with her she has Flora Robson, Kathleen Byron and two other sisters. Around this first trio and their vacillating emotions the picture is played, with David Farrar as the English agent and Sabu as the young native general moving amidst the general unrest.

If you've read the novel of the fight of spirituality against physical elements you know what to expect; if not, prepare yourself for an unusual film that is going to make you uneasy. Kathleen Byron is the very personification of Evil; seen as she is in a nun's habit, she may have you dreaming bad dreams. Deborah Kerr is adequate, but not as outstanding as she should be.

The settings are magnificent Technicolor with some effects that will make you gasp. But your reaction to the unfortunate experiences of these women whose spiritual vocations were not strong enough to resist temptation will be anything but pleasant.

Your Reviewer Says: Heady strangeness.

The Red Stallion (Eagle-Lion)

GUESS what this is about—a big red horse. When we tell you he's even named "Red," you'll get the general mild idea that this is something all the boys and gals will line up with their nickels to see. Ted Donaldson is going to make them very happy as the little guy who's bound to save Grandma Jane Darwell's ranch by turning his horse into a racer. Homey sentimentality runs riot with Robert Paige and Noreen Nash in the romantic yoke together.

Red has a fight with a bear which is going to cause a lot of juvenile excitement and there's a minor-league horse race to top things off. Everything ends in a nice storybook fashion with Grandma getting a fistful of dollars—at just the last minute, of course.

Black Gold (Allied Artists)

THAT old Charley Eagle is one of the nicest Indians ever to come riding over the reeds, thanks to Anthony Quinn. Wife Katherine DeMille, who’s also his stoical half in the picture, has just too much of an Oxford accent to convince you that she is one Sarah Eagle, a passive Indian on an Oklahoma ranch. The affairs of Charley and Sarah get mixed up with a Chinese boy they adopt and some business about a horse, Black Gold, with an oil-well touch to the whole proceedings.

Everything is set off in that new Cinema, which is not too bad and not too good; the Indian touch now and then perks up one’s interest; and, as we’ve said, Charley is a guy to warm your heart. But the gold in this is still pretty much hidden.

Your Reviewer Says: Harmless.

Wild Harvest (Paramount)

THE wheat fields certainly get a going-over in this. First they have Alan Ladd and his tough-listed, tough-minded crew among them Robert Preston and Lloyd Nolan—rolling over them in those big new combines; then they have to put up with Dorothy Lamour trampling them down with her spike heels. Combines, those revolutionizers of harvesting, certainly belong in the wheat fields and this look—see at how they work is something. But Dorothy, nice girl that she may be, certainly is not at home on a farm. Those sultry eyes and sirenish ways should have a bit of comedy to help them along; when this harvest really gets wild, poor Dottie comes in only for a laugh.

It’s not all her fault—it may be that after the first interesting workout of the combines, plus a big wheat fire, no one seems to know exactly what to do with the picture. That may also account for some pretty ludicrous scenes, plus some pretty bad trickery on the part of Ladd who stoops to some things no good hero ever thought of. The men punch at each other and both Dottie and the farmers get good and mad, but all their theatrics can’t get this back on the right track.

Your Reviewer Says: Reaps nothing much.

AS Kathryn stood there, waiting for the boy she loved to waltz her into the glittering ballroom, she knew this was her night of nights.

Never had she felt so completely happy or looked so immaculately fresh and sweet.

Indeed that eternal freshness was one of Kathryn's charms. It was something that she strove for, recognizing it almost as a passport to the popularity she had known since her teens.

Just to look at her was to realize that here was a girl far too clever, far too fastidious to ever take chances with off-color breath (halitosis).

Can You Be Sure?

Can you say as much for yourself? Do you foolishly take your breath for granted? Well... don't!

One little offense (and you may not know when you're guilty) can stamp you as a person to avoid.

Follow the delightful precaution that countless popular people take... Listerine Antiseptic night and morning and between times when you want to be at your best. While sometimes systemic, most cases of halitosis, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic halts such fermentation, and then overcomes the odors fermentation causes.

Hedy and Mark: Several years ago when Mark Stevens was attempting a look-in, a toehold, a finger clasp on the proverbial first rung, Hedy Lamarr saw the boy and asked that he be given a role in her current film.

Nothing came of it despite Hedy's efforts, but Mark never forgot.

So, when Hedy's recent breakup with John Loder left her confused and unhappy, Mark appeared on the scene as her friend.

They dined several nights in a row and Hedy, sensing his sincerity, poured out her troubles to one she knew would sympathize and understand.

Mark's strength and understanding (having gone through a recent separation himself) have brought them together in a strong bond of friendship. Whether this will bloom into romance, only time will tell.

Party: When Celeste Holm and husband Schuyler Dunning give a party, it means outdoor clothes, wonderful barbecued meats and all the garden-party trimmings.

Cal admits he went back for second helpings of everything, but Cesar Romero beat our record by about two helpings. Cesar was happy because he'd just drawn a top role in the picture "Spoonhandle" and will take off for location in Maine at the end of the summer.

Zachary Scott who was winding up "Cass Timberlane," his fourth picture in a row, looked fatigued. Mrs. Scott hopes he will go down to Texas to visit his family and get some rest.

Zach left for home and bed (having an early call) before we took up sides for "The Game," but the vivacious Mrs. Scott, along with the lively Celeste, kept the guests in stitches with their antics. Celeste, incidentally, is Premieres and Previews: Dressed in our best, Cal and Michael North set off for the premiere of the English picture "Black Narcissus." Crowds of fans jammed the streets leading to the Carthay Circle Theater ablaze with lights and flowers, and lined on the sides, front and rear with bleachers overflowing with eager spectators. Stars by the score were cheered by the throngs outside. Looking a bit bewildered by all the beautiful folderol was the star of the picture Deborah Kerr and her husband, Tony Bartley, Sonja Henie, Rosalind Russell, Celeste Holm, Joan Fontaine, Jack and Mary Benny, Norma Shearer, Alan and Sue Ladd were just a few of the many who made the evening a bright one.

Later at Ciro's we met others who had attended and compared notes. John Payne and his cute little wife, Gloria De Haven, looking beautiful in green taffeta, Margaret Whiting and Jean Sablon, Mark Stevens in a party, that cute couple, the Donald O'Connors—all agreed it had been a festive affair.

The following night, however, was quite a different thing. Mike North's first big picture, "The Unsuspected," was to have a "sneak" preview and, of course, we were anxious to know the public reaction. Meeting first at Cal's apartment, Michael with Sonja Henie, Gabriel Tudela of Lima, Peru, and Cal set off to the theater.

We needn't have worried. Michael in "The Unsuspected" is, in all our opinions, a future bobby-sox rave.
INSIDE STUFF

Later at the Crillon for a bite of supper, Sonja and Cal agreed Michael will hit the movie jackpot.

Babies: The discovery by Deborah Kerr and her husband Tony Bartley that Dinah Shore's and George Montgomery's baby was due on the same day as theirs, Christmas, no less, began all sorts of telephoned messages among them. At least they know each other's holiday plans by now.

Incidentally, George is making all the nursery furniture himself, even to carving the cradle. What an heirloom that will make for future generations!

The Macdonald Careys are sooo happy over the prospect of their coming child, due in February; and, of course, Bill Williams and Barbara Hale think that baby daughter of theirs something extraspecial. And it is, Bill. No arguing please. That comeback screen career of Maureen O'Sullivan, after finishing "The Big Clock" with Ray Milland, was halted when Maureen and husband, director Johnny Farrow learned their family was about to be increased to five children (what a happy brood). Dana Andrews is hoping for a girl this time to balance his family of two boys and one girl. And visitors who have seen the two babies recently adopted by Joan Crawford, a boy and girl which increases her family to four, declare them real beauties.

But the baby everyone is looking forward to, as if it were Hollywood's very own, is due to arrive at the home of Shirley Temple and husband John Agar. Shirley announced the coming event at a family party and everyone is delighted. John is already at work in the picture "War Party" but it's doubtful if Shirley will be able to go into the picture with him as planned. But with this happiness to look forward to, she really doesn't mind. Seems only yesterday Shirley was a dancing, singing baby wonder herself. What a mother Shirley will make!

But even Joan had a time remembering it.

The way Hollywood men take care of their figures. Clark Gable who has shed pounds (but not by a four-day diet, he tells us) will refuse a cocktail as quickly as a bonbon when he has a picture ahead. Courageous: The sight of Susan Peters, beautiful and serene in her wheelchair on “The Sign of The Ram” set, is an object lesson to those stars who spend half their lives complaining over minor troubles... And the obvious happiness of Laraine Day and Leo Durocher in their marriage, despite their headlined troubles that came in outsized bunches, should calm those couples who complain of the dullness of their settled lives... Alan Marshall who bravely fought the nervous illness that threatened his career for the past several years, just at a time when stardom seemed imminent, is back and ready to try again, which should shame the more self-indulgent of Hollywood... And the way Jimmy Stewart, with no stage experience for twelve years, stepped into Frank Fay’s unbeatable shoes in the Broadway show “Harvey” overrode any critical comparisons, and has made the whole town proud of the lad who had the courage for such an underaking.

It also meant lunches, bedtime baths for the boys and dinner, too. Evie didn’t mind. Even the prospect of a big house to keep straight failed to daunt her.

Are you in the know?

What's this paper doll trying to do?
- Get into print
- Scoop the news
- A slight of hand trick

Ma Nature gave this little girl a great big hand. Outsize paws seem smaller if you make them less conspicuous. With one hand, practice crumpling a sheet of newspaper into a ball. That's a trick to limber hands; lend them grace (a confidence builder!). At "those" times, too, you can gain self-assurance—with Kotex, and that exclusive safety center. Because it gives extra protection, it's a can't-miss for confidence.

Which type calls for this neckline?
- Pudge
- Pee-wee
- TNT

Scarfes are neckline news again. Top 'em off with a fancy stickpin—maybe made from your own sorority pin. But mind you—chin-checking scarves are not for the short or chubby. It's the TNT gal (tall 'n' terrible) who can best wear the style shown here. And by the way, it's smart to know Kotex comes in sizes. 3 of 'em! So—from Regular, Junior and Super you can choose the napkin suited to you.

What the lonesome lass lacks is—
- Goldilocks
- Good standing
- Gorgeous gams

It takes more than honey-hued tresses and trim pegs to make an impression. Avoid that Leaning Tower look. Since it comes from toting textbooks on one favored side—shift the ballast! Good standing improves your poise. Of course, poise is yours for the asking on difficult days—when you've asked for Kotex. Naturally! Because Kotex is the napkin with flat pressed ends that prevent telltale outlines.

Will you score with your stadium squire, if you're
- Cheer-hopy
- Sweet and silent
- A quiz kid

Gals should know football!—squires complain. Block that "kick"—by boning up beforehand. Then get with the game!

Have fun! Better to cheer your head off than be sweetly mute or a question-box. And don't let calendar interference faze you. Just depend on Kotex: it's made to stay soft while you wear it. And teamed with a Kotex Sanitary Belt (all-elastic—snug-fitting—adjustable!) Kotex keeps you in blissful comfort, from kick off to final whistle.

Ricardo Montalban and his wife. It was love at first screen sight for Ricardo

Lovely Nancy Oakes de Marigny, who suffered through that Bahama incident when her husband Count Alfred de Marigny was accused and exonerated of killing her father Sir Harry Oakes, told us of meeting our friend Turhan Bey in Mexico. But it was only friendship, we assure you.

French songs by the guests with Jean singing his French theme song "Passing By" followed by the English version by Margaret Whiting made it a spirited evening. Vive la France, say we and the best to our French friends.

Here and There: Lauren Bacall is so in love with her husband, Humphrey Bogart, she serves him before the guests and flutters around like a star-struck fan. Which, come to think of it, she is. And that’s not bad. We need more in-love wives in Hollywood . . . Betty Garrett, wife of Larry Parks, is so discouraged (at this writing) over the lack of action in her screen career she may return to New York for another play. And that means those long separations both Larry and Betty abhor . . . Henry Fonda, driving to work of a bright sunny morning with the top of his convertible down and resplendent in a plaid sport shirt, looking better than he has in years. And that success of his pal, Jimmy Stewart, treading the Broadway boards in "Harvey" has given Henry that old feeling again. Only movies won’t let him go . . . Everyone agreeing Brian Aherne, who seems so austere both on and off the screen, dances a wonderful samba. Incidentally, Mrs. Aherne is a very stunning woman.

Ricardo Montalban: The picture was "Fiesta" and the young man who danced and heroed his way to overnight success was Ricardo Montalban, a Mexican lad who had never danced before and most certainly never fought a bull. And yet at the picture’s conclusion, studio and fans alike knew a new star was ascending. So, where has all this left him? Exactly where it found him—modest, hopeful, happy in his home life, grateful.

About Ricardo there is no Spanish flash, Latin daring, Mexican whoop-la; off screen that is. Mild in manner, almost diffident in approach but still possessing enough elat to stand on his own, this Mexican-born actor is far from America's idea of a hot peppered tamale. Ricardo, product of a Hollywood high school, much prefers steak, blood-rare, a baked potato and salad to chili. But our bread—"Here it is too soggy I think. The crisp French loaves we have in Mexico are better," he contends.

With every intention of becoming an engineer, he was brought to Hollywood by his older brother Carlos from his home town of Torreon. Enrolling at Fairfax High School to catch up on pre-college civics and history, the Mexican lad was too shy to try out his one-word-at-a-time English in classes. So, to overcome this, he signed up for courses in public speaking, graduating to bits in school plays and finally emerging as a Mexican-Russian in "Tovarich" where he was spotted by an M-G-M talent scout. To avert any such nonsense as movies, his brother packed him off to school in New York. But Ricardo ended up playing in summer stock opposite such stars as Tallulah Bankhead in "Her Cardboard Lover" and Elsa Maxwell in "Our Betters" where, believe it or not, he was better than Elsa.

Again M-G-M sent for him but before he could test for "Tortilla Flats," the illness of his mother called him back to Mexico. Here he was given the lead in the Mexican film "Five Were Chosen" and, he says, "I was so awful no one would speak to me."

He was almost resigned to a lifetime job in his father's little dry-goods store when the American director Norman.

It was a gay affair with the town lovelies in their prettiest frocks. Lunching with Mrs. Errol Flynn and designer Don Loper as guests of pretty Iris Bynum around the pool of the beautiful Bel-Air Hotel, Iris is the girl very much in Clark Gable's life these days and a wonderfully good sport. To Neil Van-derbilt's cocktail party with the guest of honor, Mrs. Leonard Thomas of Newport and New York, Mary Pickford and Buddy Rogers, Maria Palmer and hosts of socialites greeted the lovely Mrs. Thomas. Later, at Chanteclair, we glimpsed George Sanders being very attentive to Ava Gardner, who was wearing huge horn-rimmed spectacles, of all things ... Chatting with director Edmund Goulding, who is bringing in “Nightmare Alley” on schedule, and chuckling at Goulding's aside after an inspired bit of directing: “How did I ever get so clever?”

Birthday Celebration: When Errol and Nora Flynn learned Cal had a birthday in the olling, they set out to make it a happy one indeed. The fun began a day or two before when Errol telephoned Cal to meet him and Nora at their home. From there we went to the airport and in the four-passenger plane he had rented for the olling to view the yacht races from Catalina.

The day was clear and bright and below us the boats with their sails looked like pretty toys. Flying low, we tried to glimpse the Frank Morgan and George Brent boats, both in the race. It was an exciting experience and one we all enjoyed.

On Sunday we drove up Laurel Canyon to the beautiful Flynn home perched on the side of a mountain overlooking the Valley. Gathered around the patio and pool, waiting to wish us a happy birthday, were Clark Gable and Iris Bynum, Mark Stevens, Betty Furness with husband Bud Ernst, tennis star Frank Shields, David May, Bruce Cabot, Errol, Nora and many others.

Swimming, and tennis that was really something, with that guy Shields beating all comers, was followed by a delicious lunch and a big "happy birthday" cake for Cal. Errol had very tactfully placed three candles atop the icing.

Laughter in full boom: Frank Morgan's mirthquake had the other diners shaking!

Clark Gable and Cal discussed his last picture, "The Hucksters," which will reap a harvest, talked over with Errol his hopes of buying a plane of his own, discussed sports with Shields and in between roared with laughter at the antics of Errol's pet girpon, sent to him from Slam.

All together it was a grand weekend, thanks to the Flymys, and a wonderful birthday celebration for Cal.

A Chat with Kelly: Finishing an interview in the M-G-M commissary, we strolled over to the table of our good friend, Gene Kelly, and pulled out a chair. There is no ceremony and no need for formality with Gene and Cal. We're friends, we know it, accept it and that's that.

In his inevitable white cotton undershirt (his dancing costume) he looked relaxed and at ease as always. Gene has no pretensions; he's plain down-to-earth Kelly, take it or leave it.

"Well, fellow Pittsburgher," he said, "what's with you these days?" We watched him put away a dish of chocolate ice cream before answering.

We talked then of Pittsburgh and the little suburban town of West Elizabeth where Cal was born and the girl Gene used to court there while attending classes at the University of Pittsburgh. And finally we got around to his last picture, "The Pirate." He was due to catch up with a few dance sequences that afternoon.

"Think I'll do 'Easter Parade' next," he said, with Cal arguing that Gene should really hold out for a good solid drama. Finally we talked of movie glamour girls and what happens to them. "Studio spoils them," he said. "Soon as they show signs of becoming stars, they're petted and pampered by everyone until they lose all perspective." He's so right.

"Aren't you glad your cute wife Betsy isn't in pictures?" we asked.

News of Helmut: His voice came to us over the telephone and although it had been a year since we’d talked, we recognized that Viennese accent at once. “So much has happened since we last saw each other,” Helmut said. He has been to Europe and to visit his family in Vienna, then to Canada to make pictures and, later on, to Broadway as Zalulah Bankhead’s leading man in “The Eagle Has Two Heads.”

We asked about his romance with the pretty deb, Charlene Wightsmen. “We talk over the telephone all the time,” he said, “and if you think it doesn’t cost a fortune to talk to Paris, London and Rome, you should see my bill.”

We asked then about marriage. “First I must think of my family,” he said, “I have brought my mother to this country and when my younger brother arrives they will both come to Hollywood.”

Helmut’s brother is an engineer and will enroll here in California Tech. Helmut assures us that for the time being he’ll stay in Hollywood for more movies. At least he hopes to.

Hey, kids: Want a pair of Gene Autry jeans? Real cowboy jeans like Autry and other cowboys wear when there’s work to be done? Well, just sit back and wait a little while and they’ll be yours, for there’s a deal whereby 2,500,000 pairs of Autry jeans are about to be manufactured just for you kids. You’ll read all about it when they’re ready.

And speaking of Gene, he’s finally made that producing contact with Columbia Studios, so after he returns from his rodeo tour, which should be soon, you can contact the actor by writing to Columbia Studios in Hollywood.

Gene’s old sidekick, Smiley Burnette or “The Frog” as you call him, is also at this studio. But whether they’ll be together again hasn’t been decided yet. But watch for that “Joan” announcement and get your pair first.

Screen Play by Wanda Tuchock
Based on the Novel by Frank Yerby
Something disturbing has happened—something which the editors of Photoplay feel that you—and Hollywood—should know about.

In Scarsdale, a suburb of New York, the Motion Picture Council headed by Mrs. William D. Moyle, set out to determine whether mothers throughout the country were as concerned over the type of film entertainment being offered at children's matinees as were the mothers of Scarsdale. So they sent questionnaires to other motion picture councils and the replies represented 2,226 civic organizations in thirty states.

The key question was whether or not the organizations addressed considered the films shown at children's matinees satisfactory entertainment for their young audiences.

Seventy-five per cent of the responses said no!

Yet children's matinees are virtually the only attempt our American system makes to give young people appropriate screen fare.

Is Hollywood, the greatest medium in the world for mass entertainment, turning a deaf ear to the children's "Tell me a story?"

If so, why? Is it because it won't pay? It has on occasion in the past. There have been "Little Women," "Little Lord Fauntleroy," the early Disney pictures, more recently the "Flicka" and "Lassie" stories, the "Andy Hardy" series, to name a few. But the occasions still have not been frequent enough to fill the hungry eyes of America's vast junior audiences.

The Motion Picture Council of Scarsdale, as a result of its questionnaire, has come up with some further suggestions for books with universal appeal to be filmed. Among these are "Just So Stories" by Rudyard Kipling, "The Cloister and the Hearth" by Charles Reade, "The Little Lame Prince" by Ruskin, "Ivanhoe" (going into production in England), "The Pied Piper of Hamelin" by Browning, "Rip Van Winkle" by Irving, "The Nurenberg Stove" by De la Rame.

Photoplay agrees with their suggestions and hopes that one of these days some of them will come to life on the marquees of America.

THE LARRY PARKS PUZZLE

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS
The first part of his story was a sensational success—but what about the next instalment?

Is he a one-shot? Or a sure-shot?

Whom else could I mean but Larry Parks and, of course, I'm talking about the unprecedented predicament of this young actor who, a year ago, soared to an Academy Award nomination in ‘The Jolson Story’ and who is today facing a great big WHAT in the future.

Larry is one of the most quixotic cases of my thirty years of looking ‘em over as movie stars. And his case is the back-scenes talk of Hollywood today.

Was he up for an Oscar because of his fine performance? Or did he get there on the strength of another man’s (Al Jolson’s) electric voice singing through his personality?

Recently, at a big party, I was all ears when I heard Larry’s name come up. One of the men talking is one of Hollywood’s most important producers—at a rival studio, not Columbia, which is Larry’s home lot. He said:

“The case of this boy is a heart breaker because he hit and hit big with another star’s personality. Not only was Larry singing with Al Jolson’s voice, but he had been loaned the Jolson personality, been coached in the Jolson mannerisms, and then to top it all off, he had Al’s life story thrown in. He gave a (Continued on page 106)

The boulevards over here in Paris throng again with civilians. Men and women sit in the sun in sidewalk cafes discussing the exciting politics of today. And everywhere you look you see American movie stars. They've swooped down upon us like beautiful birds of paradise wearing all their plumage, some gracefully, some not so gracefully. They're making pictures in the English studios. They're holidaying in London, in Paris, on the Riviera and in Switzerland. Some of them have been ambassadors of good will. Others, I regret, have failed on this score.

I SURE thanked my lucky stars that Lindsay Diane Briskin was used to seeing me around because when I arrived at her house on the morning of her six-months' birthday she'd decided that was the day for her to stand on her own two feet for the first time. Lindsay was tickled pink with her performance, her mom and pop were ditto—to say nothing of me and my camera.

It really all started way back when Betty Hutton first came to Hollywood. I am at Paramount Studios where Betty made her first picture, so I've taken plenty of pictures of Lindsay Diane's mother. Then when Lindsay Diane came along I started doing monthly sittings for her mother's private collection. The usual thing—you know, nude on a bear rug, high-chair hijinks, etc. Someday she'll probably want to shoot me for these shots.

But this day was a real occasion. A born camera natural (hasn't her mother made her fame and fortune in front of a camera—and isn't her father, Ted Briskin, owner of a large camera corporation?), she immediately started playing, modestly covering herself with bubbles. You should have seen her face when the bubbles broke.

One look at these pictures and you'll catch why I think Lindsay Diane Briskin is the most photogenic baby in Hollywood.

For richer or for poorer—" said the tanned young man with the serious face and the squared shoulders. "Until death do us part—" The girl's eyes had brought all of the blue of the outdoors into the shaded chapel with her.

Their voices were low—part of the hush that had hovered in these old Spanish walls for almost two centuries. The slanting finger of light reaching through the high, stained windows to touch the boy's blond head and to trace in dull gold the pattern of the lace on the girl's brown one, was the same late afternoon sun that had laid its gentle blessing on shadowy generations of couples before them.

"Quiet" is the way this particular couple had wanted it. "We're going to have a very simple wedding," said Kathryn Grayson when she first planned it. "Just Johnnie (Continued on page 114)
John Lund reaches new heights with Betty Hutton in comedy hit "The Perils of Pauline".
Everyone's talking about John Lund who does some straight-from-the-shoulder talking—about himself!

MY outstanding characteristic is bewilderment. Right now, heading the bewilderment category is the fact that I, John Lund, am in movies.

And, one of the most startling things about being in movies is being asked to tell what kind of a guy you are. Such a request makes me feel more exposed than the scenes left on the cutting room floor by the Johnston office.

However, they tell me that such personal confession is good for my options—so here you have me, as clearly as I can see myself—which is about as clearly as a face seen through an adobe wall.

I've been in Hollywood a shade more than two years. I've done two pictures—"To Each His Own" and "The Perils of Pauline." And as I write this I'm working in a third, "The Night Has a Thousand Eyes."

Each picture has given me an inferiority complex. I've become face conscious. Projection rooms are torture chambers to me, at this point.

When I saw the first day's rushes on "To Each His Own," I went home and started packing. I had thought I was smiling tenderly at Olivia de Havilland, but on screen I looked as though I were ready to bite her ear off, and I didn't have any eyes at all. After that I refused to look at myself, but I began enjoying the work.

All this propaganda about how tough it is to work in pictures, to me, is a lot of nothing. The really chic Hollywood attitude is to mutter how brutal it is getting up at six in the morning and working until six at night. I don't claim that is easy, but how often do we do that?

If you get anywhere at all, you make three or four pictures a year, at most, and usually less. That means you average three or four months off each year. If that's overwork, I'll have a double portion with mushroom sauce.

They are very good friends of your mother's, whom they know as Jeanne Crain. (They are what we, in this new world of yours, call “fans.”) Your mother has never met them but they know her very well indeed because she is a movie star.

Of course you wouldn't know about that yet. You are probably only aware that the lady who leans over your bassinet is quite as lovely as she is kind and attentive—and you probably are unaware that this is unusual. Outside of that, what has being a movie star's son gotten you thus far?

Have you managed to get more than your share of bottles—even an extra ounce or two? You have not! Or to evade your cod liver oil? Not so far! Or to stay in a blissful state of perpetual dryness? Definitely no!

A RAUCOUS voice rang out. "Where is Claudeen Colburt?" the vocal bugle demanded. "I want to see Claudeen Colburt."

On the Triangle Productions set for "Sleep, My Love," property men turned pale, electricians hid behind master control panels, and here and there a strong man fainted because, after all, Hollywood is the Land of Protocol, also called The Home of the Red Velvet Rug. There are sacred rules about when a star is to be approached, by whom, under what circumstance, which knee flexed. Although no names will be named, there are some stars in Hollywood who are tougher to contact than Stalin's wife.

So, to a crew which had never worked with her before, the sound of Miss Colbert's name being rendered in this unseemly fashion was more terrifying than an air circus of flying saucers.

The door of Miss Colbert's dressing room opened and a mischievous face peered out. An amused voice demanded, "Who is calling me by that awful name?"

"It is I, Bob Cummings," said that unabashed gentleman. "Hi, Claudeen."

"Where on earth did you ever get that label?" pursued Miss Colbert.

Bob, grinning, explained with mock dignity, "Where I come from—Joplin, Missouri—that's what you're called: Claudeen Colburt."

"How did they like me in Joplin?" asked Miss Colbert earnestly.

"In Joplin, like everywhere, they're simply nuts about you," said Bob.

Claudette Colbert's eyes crinkled at the corners. "In that case, call me Claudeen."

By noon, everyone on the United Artists lot had heard about the gag. By noon of the following day, everyone on the set was calling the picture's star Claudeen.

This story is probably the best possible answer to those who ask, "What is Claudette Colbert really like?"

Happiness is a thing called BILL

It wasn't always that way with Bill Holden—who once viewed life from a not-so-merry-go-round

BY JERRY ASHER

For the first time in his twenty-nine years, Bill Holden's stopped spinning. He can look at you without running furtive fingers through a shock of brownish-blond hair. When he sits in a chair, those long, lean legs no longer wind themselves around like vines. He talks without tugging at his tie.

"You're gazing upon a relaxed man," Bill sighs gratefully.

It took nearly a year after V-J day for ex-GI Bill Holden to reconvert to Hollywood. And it took exactly one picture—"Dear Ruth"—for the movie fans, who hadn't seen a Holden film in five long years, to reconvert to Bill.

He grins, a slow smile that gains momentum and spreads until it stretches from ear to ear.

"You see, the entire time I was in the Army I was well adjusted. But, when I got out, if ever there was a time that I doubted myself, that was it. I was supposed to go right into "Dear Ruth" but they kept postponing it. In the Army I was just like everyone else. But here I was an individual again and instead of that feeling of freedom I had counted on, I didn't know what to do about myself.

"I was short-tempered, moody and depressed.

Naturally, after the Army, I had expected there would be some adjustment requiring about a month at the most. Well for ten months I was a fugitive from a psychoanalyst. And then I went to work.”

Bill was discharged from the Army in November of 1945. Reconverting to peace also meant reconverting to his wife, Brenda Marshall, and to their three-year-old son, Peter Westfield. To say nothing of the new child they were expecting. For after four years of marriage the Holdens were practically strangers!

When she came back Bill was on his way to Carson City where they were shooting "Remarkable Andrew." Eleven days later they rushed Bill home and into the hospital for an emergency appendectomy. The afternoon they let him out Brenda was rushed in for the same operation. By the time she was dismissed, Bill was making "The Fleet's In." The day he finished, Warner Bros. sent Brenda to the President's Birthday Ball in Washington. Instead of returning, she was taken on to New York for the premiere of "Captains of the Clouds."

apologizing for not being able to get up.

Maria Montez—I think it was at the beginning of 1941. She has just come to Hollywood and she's a yellow blonde, and no one knows who she is—except Maria. I meet her in a fashionable bar. And between sips of something, Maria says, "In Maria was paid $100,000 and ten per cent of the profits for Greer Garson—I met Greer when she first came to Hollywood in 1938. She was under contract to Metro and they were paying her a thousand dollars a week. But they wouldn't give her a chance to work. And Greer was so sick in spirit, her body caught the disease. And she told me then she was going to have an operation on her back. Which she didn't need—when she landed the part of Mrs. Chips. . .

Joan Crawford—no job—poison at the box office. So I went to see her in her palatial Brentwood home—to sympathize with her. And found her washing diapers! The diaper laundry had burned down the day before. But life, and I do mean babies and diapers, had to go on! . . .

Memories of Susan Hayward when she first started in pictures. I was on the set the first day of her first picture—I won't mention the title because Susie wants me to forget! She was scared pink, almost the color of her hair. The assistant director screamed at her, "Hayward, come here!" With a tightening of her lips, she "came here." And I thought, "When that girl's a star, she'll get her own back." She's a star. And the early pushing around has left a scar of shyness. But no one has ever complained that Susan Hayward's mean on the set. . . .

Great Expectations

More than a century ago Charles Dickens wrote this story. Today, from the English studios of J. Arthur Rank, comes a great picture in which once again you thrill to the magic of a great storyteller.

1. "Ye'll never escape me if ye break your promise!" Paralyzed with fright, young Pip (Anthony Wager) mutely assures the desperate escaped convict Magwitch (Finlay Currie) he'll return with food and drink for him.

2. Following a chase across the moors, Magwitch is captured and taken back to the prison ship. Before he embarks, Magwitch turns and looks long and silently at Pip, the only one who has ever shown him a kindness.

3. Pip's bleak young life is enlivened by occasional visits to the home of eccentric Miss Havisham (Martita Hunt) where he plays with her niece Estella (Jean Simmons). The pretty, imperious girl fascinates Pip.

4. The years pass. One day Pip (John Mills) and his brother-in-law Joe Gargery (Bernard Miles) receive the astounding news from lawyer Jaggers (Francis L. Sullivan) that an unknown benefactor has settled an income on Pip!
5. The transition of the rough country boy begins. Herb Pocket (Alec Guinness) grooms Pip for his new station in life.

6. Pip, now a young gentleman of fashion, again meets Estella (Valerie Hobson), who is a beautiful young woman. Loving her, he's jealous and hurt when she encourages Bentley Drummie (Torin Thatcher).

7. Magwitch, risking his life if caught, appears at the apartment, reveals he's Pip's unknown benefactor.

8. Estella plans to marry Drummie. Miss Havisham realizes the vengeance she sought for her own unhappiness by planning for Pip to love Estella hopelessly has borne bitter fruit. She dies broken-hearted.

9. Pip and Herbert try to smuggle Magwitch out of the country. They are run down by a packet boat. The convict is fatally hurt and captured.

10. In the prison hospital Pip comforts the old man with news of the daughter he had lost as a child.

11. For in Jagger's office he had learned Estella is Magwitch's daughter, adopted by Miss Havisham. The events of the last few weeks prove too much for Pip. He becomes seriously ill, is taken back home by his brother-in-law Joe.

12. Recovering, Pip finds Estella, her engagement broken because of her parentage, prepared to live shut away from the world as Miss Havisham did. He realizes there is only one course he can take to save Estella.
HEARD Jane Russell sing the other night, and must admit that I was pleasantly surprised. She can hold her own with any good “singer with a band,” and has proved that there is more than one way to put on a good front . . . Judy Garland is still my favorite singer, however, but I do wish she would stop trying to do things with over-orchestrated songs and just be herself . . . yet really don’t change at all. What I mean to say is that a few years ago everyone in the social whirl was going to parties given by the Countess di Frasso. The Countess di Frasso has been switched to Atwater Kent, but it is the same crowd in the same social whirl. They just gave the host the “switcheroo,” a trick they do with the same story when making it into another picture . . .
I think Martha Vickers is a cutie, even though she insists that she must have freckles to be sexy. For me, sexy can be with or without freckles.

I am of the opinion that Hollywood is like any other town, and that the stuff of which heroes and heroines are made is ordinary, even as you and I. I have seen Merle Oberon in slacks, and with little make-up on, going into a bakery on Shlepp Row (the sign posts call it Beverly Drive) to buy some cake for tonight’s dinner.

Annie, Hollywood’s happy philosopher, proves that laughter makes the men come ‘round

BY HERB HOWE

LOOKING for a lift out of boredom and atomic despair the world today might well turn to the Sheridan way of life.

Miss Ann Sheridan came back to Hollywood from her two years sabbatical a practicing philosopher. Her doctrines should put to flight the dolorists who remind us we will soon be in our coffins and the atom smashers who say we will not even need coffins.

Opulent of eye as the Hope diamond or her own emerald-cut Kohinoor, philosopher Sheridan is still the Sultana of Oompf. But that’s not all. Down in Texas where she was born thirty-two years ago she was known as Clara Lou, and though all hands today in Hollywood call her Annie, her own name lingers on. She calls her cow Clara Lou. That cow, they say, is a card. So is Annie.

On the set of “Silver River,” a young father passed round the cigars in jubilation for his new bambino. Errol Flynn got one but Miss Sheridan was neglected. Annie was aggrieved. Though she smokes neither stogie nor hookah, the Sultana played football and baseball in her days and says she had the best collection of aggies of any sport in the state or Texas.

CONVERSATION is an art—it requires cultivation and practice as all arts do. But unlike other arts, it may be acquired by all of us. And it always helps to have a convenient peg on which you can hang the conversation when it languishes. We call them "Conversations Pieces."

A conversation piece can be anything that is interesting, amusing or different. It can be something you wear, something you do, something original in your home; it can be some particular facet of your personality—that particular something that makes you you.

You'll be surprised how often they come in handy.

The most discussed Hollywood conversation piece in recent years is the tiny gold whistle which hangs from Lauren Bacall's charm bracelet, given her by Humphrey Bogart before they were married. If you'll recall, it was inspired by that line of Lauren's in the movie "Casablanca," "If you want me, just whistle." That is a superb example of what I mean by "conversation piece"—it's unusual, and it's truly Bacall.

But Lauren's collection of conversation pieces doesn't end with the whistle. She has a second one, also decidedly her own—her blouses. (Continued on page 112)

SHOPPING around Hollywood and Beverly Hills gets more and more exciting—so many new and lavishly appointed shops keep opening up! And the temptation to buy anything from gadgets to gorgeous gowns, furs and fabulous shoes is terrific. The “small town” atmosphere has just about disappeared from the local shopping scene and as for Beverly Hills—well, the salons in that little center can now compete with those in the world capitals. Beverly boasts a new shoe shop (Joseph) that’s one of the most unusual. Has the air of a modern drawing room, complete with an indoor garden and welcoming fireplace. Tea is served every afternoon at four—and the shoes! They “floor” you! Little gold kid slippers, sparkling with tiny mirrors as trimmings; rhinestone-studded black satin evening sandals with matching bags.

As we snoop around, we note that the giant handbags, so popular so long, seem to be giving way to bags of daintier sizes. Yet with cool weather coming on, the gals will be willing to lug more things in bigger purses again no doubt. But there’s nothing “tiny” about the beautiful new evening bag (Continued on page 100)

DEAR MISS COLBERT:
I am in love with my boy friend, who says he is in love with me.
We would like to be married but due to the fact that he is in college and is receiving only $50.00 per month, we could not get along. I am willing to work, but he simply won't hear of it. He says he has too much pride along that line.
We have decided not to see each other for awhile. We have tried this before and I find it very hard to live without him. When he comes back, he always seems to be more in love with me than ever, but he still can't decide on marriage.
He doesn't seem to think he would be able to devote much time to me because of his studies. I would be willing to overlook that while he is in school. What should I do to persuade him?
Kate Lee I.

If you had discussed this quite frankly with your mother I think she might have come to the same conclusion I have reached: Your beau is undoubtedly very fond of you, but he simply does not want to get married yet.

In any emotional relationship, most boys try to be as kind as well-reared girls. But a girl who tries to cajole a man into marriage is often setting up future work for the divorce court.

In our society, marriage is often regarded as a handicap for a man, but an advantage for a girl. For this reason, most men are not eager to rush into marriage unless they are overwhelmingly in love or convinced that great advantage is offered by the union. Marriage is becoming more and more an equal partnership. If this boy is really too proud to allow you the right to contribute to the marriage, he might not be a very good bet as a husband. You should relax and let the boy do the pursuing.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
I am twenty and have been married for a year to an ex-G.I. who is attending college under the G.I. Bill.
I work in an office eight hours a day. The work is demanding and very tiresome. My husband goes to school mornings, but has no classes in the afternoon. He spends the time playing ball or hanging out with friends at the drugstore. Many evenings he is not home when I arrive, and the house is a mess.
It would only take an hour of his leisure time to straighten up a bit, but when I discuss this with him he says he is busy. If I don’t “shut up” as he suggests, he says he is going to get a divorce. If I mention how the husbands of my girl friends help with the housework, he slaps me.
I love my husband very much and I want us to be happy. Sometimes I think that if I quit my office job my problems would be solved, but I have to keep on working to support us.

Mrs. J. L. D.

You have said that you love your husband very much—a statement that interests me. Personally, I can’t understand how a girl who is working eight hours a day to aid a man through college could continue to love that man if he abused her.

However, love is what the economists and politicians call “an imponderable.” There’s no predicting it.
If you really want to be happy, the only thing for you to do is to forget the appearance of your house at night. Do what you can in the morning, live it, and don’t even mention it (Continued on page 120)

Happiness Is a Thing Called Bill

(Continued from page 51) remained on a merry-go-round. Ardis (Brenda) was christened Ardis Anker (now Ardis Marshall and Pearl) was raised by a former marriage. Peter Westfield had to have his own nursery, and now they were expecting the young person who turned out to be Scott Porter! With three children, a nurse, and a couple in the kitchen, Bill briefly toyed with the idea of installing a red and green traffic light system. So they started out to look for a new home. Bill and Brenda had a definite picture in mind; they knew what they wanted and exactly what they could afford to pay. Bill was working at Columbia, co-starring with Glenn Ford in "The Man from Colorado." On his first day off he made a date with his wife and a real-estate man. The real-estate man tried to tell them about a house that belonged to comedian Leon Errol, who had lost his wife and now wanted to sell and move into a smaller place. "I think maybe I must have been listening with half an ear," Bill laughed. "Anyway, the way the house was described to me, I wouldn't even be bothered to go look at it. Then one day we were driving around." After checking at several prospects, the real-estate man drove down a winding, flower-bordered street. It had no sidewalks, and its natural unplanned pattern appealed to us instantly. On a corner we saw this beautiful Georgian, flagstone-front house. I pointed it out and kiddingly asked the real-estate man why he couldn't find us something like that." "That," he announced grimly, "is the house I've been talking about for the last five days." They saw it—two stories, four bedrooms and baths, room to think in, space to grow in—and they fell in love with it. But they knew they couldn't afford it. That night they sat at the dinner table and tried to visualize how it would feel to own such a home. Brenda looked at Bill wistfully. He blinked, gulped and kicked himself under the table. Just then the phone rang. Brenda came back a few minutes later, looking like she had swallowed a couple of tons of rudgear. "It was Leslie Fenton," she said ecstatically. "They are looking for someone to play opposite Alan Ladd in "Whispering Smith" and he suggested me. The part is mine and I'm going to take it." "They knew when they moved in that it would be a year before they could even afford to buy an ash tray, let alone the extra furniture they would be needing. Bill came home one evening and Brenda, who had preceded him, was behind the bar whipping up a milk-and-honey milk for Peter Westfield (they call him "West") on the mixmaster. "Oh Ardis," said Bill nonchalantly, "I stopped by Rennick's today. You know those bar benches we looked at? Well, we can have them next week." "But Bill," cried Brenda. "You said if we ordered them, they wouldn't be delivered for five months." "No honey," Bill emphasized the words with great masculine patience. "That was our new dining room set I was referring to." "Dining room set!" shrieked Brenda. "What dining room set? Oh Bill!—That's how the Holdens reconverted—" I've been so long since Bill Holden last appeared in the movie magazines—way back in 1942, that was—that perhaps we'd better tell you a little about his background. His real name is William Beedle, and he was born in O'Fallon, Illinois, the oldest of three brothers. When Bill was four, his father, a chemical analyst, moved the Beedle brood to Pasadena. Despite high hopes high hopes, Bill remained unimpressed by scientific research. The analysis of fertilizer he especially found completely lacking in fatal fascination. In the Beedle world, one somehow just didn't decry, "I want to be an actor." So Bill quietly slipped into the Pasadena Playhouse. He was portraying an old man of seventy when a Paramount talent scout first saw him. Bill tested late in 1938 and signed early in 1939. Columbia (who still share his contract) borrowed him for "Golden Boy." When Bill wasn't learning his part and talk, he was taking violin lessons, or training to fight like a professional. There were interviews and portrait sittings, wardrobe fittings and endless rehearsals for his numerous picture jobs. Occasionally he managed to sneak a quick visit to his bewildered family in Pasadena. And then came his marriage to Brenda Marshall, and Pearl Harbor—and the rest you all know. From here on it's clear sailing for the reconverted Holdens—loving each other, laughing at each other—working and playing, planning their future together.

SUNDAYS are especially special. Usually the kids are commandeered by Bill's parents and whisked over to Pasadena. The servants leave, Brenda gets on the telephone and Bill makes a beeline for their nearby friend, the Ronald Reagans. The Richard Carlsons, the Glenn Fords wander in as the day progresses. Bill is the organizer and how he loves organizing! He barbecues the steaks and chickens, toasts the garlic bread and bakes the potatoes. It's practically witchcraft but everything comes out piping hot and ready at the same time. ArdisStudies at Caltech weekends and offers up silent little prayers that she'll manage to whip through the salad. Speaking of cooking (and just try and stop him) for Bill it holds a serpentlike fascination. "It isn't that I eat so much," he quickly clears himself. "But I love all kinds of food, both exotic and simple. Someday I'm going to write a novel about real, culinary experiences. For the holiday, I'll have fried locusts in India, French snails in France—in fact I'll just quietly eat my way around the world." All of which recalls one of Brenda's favorite stories. They had retired early. Bill was comfortably propped up in bed reading the "Cgentlemen's Companion," or—"Round the World with Knife, Fork and Spoon" and "Exotic Drinks and Cooking." Brenda, who was writing letters, suddenly looked over at her husband. "So help me," she loves to taunt him, "he was—DROOLING!" Despite their relaxed life and living, Bill and Brenda are on top of things. There was never time to discuss before. Periodically they go on walking jags and once to their horror—dawn broke and there they were still yakking! When Bill was 15, he moved from Colorado, the company was dismissed at six. At sixteen he was back home talking to Brenda. "You see how simple life can be," he stretched himself out on the couch luxuriously while she mixed them a Martini. "I've been off the screen so long, no one recognizes me. When I come out the studio gals think it's a character from an autograph books don't even bother to look in my direction. So I'm home in a few minutes, I tell you—life certainly can be beautiful."

The following Saturday Bill was down at the market buying steaks for their Sunday barbecue. At the end of the counter stood a woman who kept staring. And staring, Bill became so aware of it he began showing his discomfort. Then she came over. "For just a moment there, you gave me quite a thrill," she giggled. "I thought you were Al Jolson. You remind me of him. How do you get a job in the studios? You could double for Alan—any time!" It's our personal opinion that Bill Holdens does a whale of a job—just "doubling" for himself.

Everybody knows how good Prunes are for breakfast...but not everybody knows how many good things can be made from them. Here's one, for example:

Easy to make, wonderful to eat...and keeps fresh and moist for a full week!

1 1/2 cups uncooked SUNSWEET "Tenderized" Prunes
1 1/2 cups granulated sugar
4 cup shortening
3 eggs, beaten
2 1/2 cups all-purpose flour
1/2 teaspoon salt
1 teaspoon mace
1 teaspoon cinnamon
1 1/2 teaspoons soda
1/4 cup boiling coffee

Wash prunes, boil 10 minutes in water to cover, drain, pit, and put through medium food chopper. Cream sugar and shortening, add beaten eggs, mix. Add prunes, mix. Add flour sifted with salt, spices, and 1/2 tsp. soda, mix well. Add coffee in which remaining soda has been dissolved. Beat well. Pour into 3 well-greased layer cake pans. Bake in moderate oven (375°) for 25 min. Combine layers with butter and sugar icing. This cake gathers moisture and will keep a full week without loss of flavor. Serves 10 to 12.

Try this Quick SUNSWEET Trick! Fill a quart jar with SUNSWEET "Tenderized"Prunes, add boiling water to cover, and let stand. Good the next day, better the day after...the longer they stand the richer they get.

SUNSWEET Prunes are tree-ripened for sweetness and flavor..."Tenderized" for quick-cooking and better eating...sealed in foil cartons for perfect protection...packed by the growers themselves.

Once you've reached the top it's human nature to sit back and say, "Now I can take it easy, play it safe."

Not so Olivia de Havilland. The day after she had dusted off her mantelpiece with a white silk handkerchief and carefully deposited upon it Hollywood's most prized trophy, the Academy Oscar, it was announced that her next picture would be "The Snake Pit," Twentieth Century-Fox's adaptation of the best-selling novel about a girl in a mental hospital.

That is definitely not "playing it safe." If Livvie had looked around deliberately for the most dangerous vehicle, she could find a role that would tax to the utmost her ingenuity as an actress, this was it. But Livvie is a gambler and has always been a mystery to Hollywood. She was either a recluse or an abide of the night spots. When people asked her why she didn't get married, her answer was bewilderingly direct. "The right man hasn't come along yet. I'm in no hurry!"

When the right man came along she didn't hesitate. She and Marcus Goodrich were married just a few weeks after they met. She didn't need a long engagement. She knew he was the right man and she was in a hurry. She is full of sentiment. During an appearance at the Hollywood Bowl one night, a policeman backstage told her that a little old lady who had come by streetcar all the way from Compton (some thirty miles) was at the stage door and wanted to see her. The little lady came in and presented Olivia with a gift, wrapped in a shoe box and covered with silver paper.

In it was a replica of Olivia as Melanie in "Gone With the Wind." She was so touched that she broke into tears.

She loves to eat, but has to be careful about food, because of a tendency to gain weight. Before she started work on "The Snake Pit" she went on a diet and lost fourteen pounds. She felt that the character should look wan and gaunt and diet was the only way to get the effect.

She can face a huge audience and give a dramatic portrayal that will put tears into the eyes of every one of her listeners, but she has a dread of being interviewed on the radio. She explains it simply—"When I play a part I'm fine—but the hardest thing for me to do is play myself."

Her greatest thrill? She still isn't quite sure. For years she thought that she could never get a bigger thrill than when she won the junior cup for public speaking at Saratoga (California) High School. Yet the night the Oscar was put into her hands, she could scarcely speak through excitement. That was a great thrill too.

So great a thrill that she's willing to gamble on a repeat for her performance in "The Snake Pit."

THE END
The Best Years of Her Life

(Continued from page 44) her so that she made up her mind to learn to bake the best cakes in California. That's how it came about that she learned to bake superlative cakes before she tackled anything as simple as a poached egg. She has been collecting cookbooks ever since and has "sports" of frantic cooking activity, sizzling language and all. Just now it is casserole cookery and she tells how Pete, her fourteen-year-old stepson, coming up on her the third day in succession growing rosy cheeks over an earthenware dish, wailed, "Oh, please—not again! Can't we eat out tonight?" Teresa produced a steak for Pete—but Niven eats her concoctions and praises them highly.

They live in a rambling white frame house in the Valley, on a three-and-one-half acre hillside plot boasting a wealth of huge trees and more riches in the lovely vistas of hills and meadows. The house has ambled right up the hillside with the result that no two rooms are on the same level and it is something of an adventure to find your way from one part of the house to another, although it isn't particularly large. Even the garden and the two patios are on different levels but wherever you are, no matter in which direction you look, there is a lovely view.

When I first knew Teresa she was always talking about the "bi-big" barbecue party they intended to give "some day when we really feel up to it." They finally gave it and were so delighted with the whole thing that they have been giving them more and more frequently ever since. The thing that they emphatically do not do at these parties is play games. "Because," says Teresa, "they interfere with conversation. And what is the use of getting interesting people together if you don't have conversation?"

In spite of the fact that one of Teresa's hobbies is interior decorating and that she fills innumerable scrapbooks with information about color schemes, wallpapers, fabrics and so on, she insists that her own house is "plain hodge podge," since most of the furniture was left over from the days when Niven had a bachelor establishment and she her own small apartment. All the chairs and divans are deep and soft and although there is no "planned period" or even a consistent color scheme, everything harmonizes to give an impression of peace. The only splash of real color in the house is a outburst of huge roses on Teresa's bedroom walls. At the moment she is brooding happily over the "leaf-green and white dining room" she will have some day.

SHE MEETS people socially with ease and an engaging eagerness, but she suffers horrible stage fright when she is about to be introduced to someone whom she admires professionally. When she first arrived in Hollywood a member of the publicity department was taking her to lunch at the studio commissary where she espied Bette Davis. She burst into tears and refused to go in. The press agent, sensing a good story in the meeting of the two women, walked round and round the block with her, imploring, but finally gave in and took her to a drive-in for a sandwich. Yet, when she met Bette later on at a party, she was as cool and poised as a plate of cream. Tears nearly overcame her when Barbara Stanwyck complimented her on her work. (Continued on page 75)

NORTHWEST OUTPOST: Columbia has issued an album of tunes from the film with Nelson Eddy's voice in fine manly fettle.

I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW: Perry Como (Victor), Ray Noble (Columbia) and the sweet singing Dinning Sisters (Capitol) are among those who have taken to the title tune which Mark Stevens sings in the movie. (For the record, let it be stated that Buddy Clark is Stevens's anonymous singing voice.)

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS: This one has a sure-fire hit ballad, "You Do," which Helen Forrest (M-G-M), Margaret Whiting (Capitol) and Vic Damone (Mercury) do for the phonographs.

DEAR RUTH: This has a bright theme, "Fine Thing." If you don't remember it, Charlie Spivak (Victor) and Les Brown (Columbia) will help refresh your memory.

BODY AND SOUL: This film took Johnny Green's torcher for its title and now the tune is due for repeated airings. Latest one is by long-absent Lee Wiley and Eric Siday's interesting little group (Victor).

OLD SPANISH TRAIL: Roy Rogers has disked the title tune for Victor, Kay Kyser for Columbia, and Andy Russell for Capitol.

VARIETY GIRL: This one has a novelty click in "Tallahassee" and Dinah Shore and Woody Herman join up for a slick Columbia grooving. Incidentally, Dinah co-stars with Frank Sinatra in a wonderful Columbia platter of "My Romance" and "Tea for Two" with all proceeds from its sale going to the Damon Runyon Cancer Fund. Don't pass it up.

LIFE WITH FATHER: Music chief wisely selected a song from the 19th Century, "Sweet Marie," to serve the film's atmosphere and Jack Smith (Capitol) gives it a fine modern treatment.

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: The New York Philharmonic Orchestra has several new Columbia albums worthy of your attention. One is Liszt's satanic Mephisto Waltz. Artur Rodzinski is on the podium for this one. . . . Modernist Igor Stravinsky conducts his own Symphony In Three Movements for sophisticated music-lovers. . . . The orchestra accompanies brilliant violinist Isaac Stern in Wieniawski's Concerto No. 2 in D Minor. The results of all three works are entirely satisfactory. . . . For more violin importance, try Jascha Heifetz's collection of modern violin transcriptions which Victor has just issued. . . . Bach's immortal Suites No. 2 and 3 get a sympathetic rendition by the Boston Symphony with Koussevitzky conducting this important Victor classical contribution. . . . Light operatic melodies of Weill, Youmans and Rodgers are finely sung by Gladys Swarthout in a new Victor album. . . . More top-grade singing is done by tenor Torsten Ralf in a grouping of Wagnerian operatic excerpts elegantly organized by Columbia. . . . Radio's famed First Piano Quartet (Victor) play Variations on a Theme by Paganini and Three Etudes by Chopin. . . . Shostakovich's stirring Ninth, written shortly after World War II and dedicated to his country's victorious armed forces, is thrillingly executed by Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony. . . . An excellent album is Columbia's collection of famous Russian melodies by Tschaikovsky and Rimski-Korsakov and played by cellist Gregor Piatigorsky.
(Continued from page 71) in “Pride of the Yankees,” and when she met dancer Vera-Ellen recently she was as breathless as a teen-aged fan, which amazed Vera-Ellen no end—she being the shy type, herself! Niven has always laughed at her and made her laugh at herself. Often when she is engaged in earnest conversation (dis- cussion, really, rather intense with her) she will suddenly catch his eye and will break all out in giggles and lose her place in what she was saying. She goes back to her subject, though.

She likes to garden but came a sad cropper this spring when she attempted a bed of larkspur. She “had at” the hard, adobe soil with a pick-axe—all five feet two inches of her—and hand tamped the baby plants down, watered them thoroughly and retired to dream of azure loneliness. Next morning the snails had taken every single plant. So-o-o she bought a box of snail poison and began over. Even snails aren’t going to defeat her.

She loves to swim and thinks the luxury of a pool is the only one for which she really yearns. She has “made passes” at learning to ride and play tennis but has never had time to be really good at either.

She buys old china and fine old woods from a favorite shop in Beverly Hills. There she dreamily makes deposits on various objects and weeks later someone phones to say, “We’re still holding the blue and white milk pitcher. Remember?” Teresa gasped apologetically. Of course she remembers. She hasn’t called for it because—oh, well, she knows it’s there and that it belongs to her and there doesn’t seem to be any particular rush about the actual possession of it. When she finally goes to pick it up she inevitably finds something else to reserve for another exciting day. The blue and white pitcher was followed by a wonderful antique chafing dish (she still owes nineteen dollars on this!) which caused a minor crisis in the Busch household when she attempted to use wood alcohol for fuel. It smelled.

Since she has been in pictures she has learned to get up at six and even to like it. Since she has been married to the ebullient Niven, she has learned to eat a tremendous breakfast and to like that, too. She does most of the family marketing and hates doing it . . . so she gets her accounts all mixed up and can never remember whether or not she received her change. She is always promising herself to “make lists of things—all kinds of things”—under the apparent impression that if she ever gets round to doing this, life will magically become much simpler than it is now. She writes notes to herself and leaves them all over the house in odd corners but usually she can’t decipher them when she comes upon them.

She loves to shop for clothes and feels wicked and delightfully guilty when she orders things without asking the prices. This, she thinks, is a handicap from the days when she could only wind-spirit at Macy’s and pretend she was ordering things. She likes simple dinner frocks and doesn’t want any glittery trimming on them. She likes slacks and tweeds—“country-looking clothes”—and thinks she is “the sloppiest woman I know” about her clothes at home. She is puzzled at women who constantly worry and fuss about their hair. Hers is long and straight and won’t take a permanent and she wonders, wistfully, sometimes, how she would look if she had it cut short like a little boy’s. She enjoys mild bath oils and colognes and what she describes as “indefinite odors.”

She hates to pose for stills and perhaps this has something to do with the legend about her disliking “leg art.” “I don’t care what they have me wearing,” she explained.

“It’s so dull, putting a leg here and an
A. Her husband's cooling love... his apparent disloyalty... may be largely her fault. She may have become neglectful of proper feminine hygiene.

Q. Can such neglect affect married happiness?

A. Doctors say many wives kill romance this way... stress that intimate daintiness demands effective douching. For this, you can depend on "Lysol" brand disinfectant.

Q. How does "Lysol" rate among other disinfectants?

A. Less "Lysol" is more effective than many other, weaker antiseptics. "Lysol," a proved germ and odor killer, is effective not only in the test tube but in contact with organic matter.

Q. How about homemade solutions—like salt, or soda?

A. No weak, makeshift solution can compare with "Lysol" for cleansing effectively.

ALWAYS USE "LYSOL" in the douche. See what a difference complete daintiness makes in renewed charm and married romance.

Check these facts with your doctor

Many doctors recommend "Lysol," in the proper solution, for Feminine Hygiene. Non-caustic, "Lysol" is non-injurious to delicate membranes. Its clean, antiseptic odor quickly disappears. Highly concentrated, "Lysol" is economical in solution. Follow easy directions for correct douching solution.

arm there and then—just sitting. I want to do something!"

Her bland little tricks on the set are fast becoming a Hollywood legend. "She knows," her husband says, "how to accomplish things without getting belligerent—without even raising her voice."

When she is nervously tense, as she is before starting a difficult scene, she takes through her teeth—"exactly like a Japanese General!" And when she is puzzled—which is rather often—she rubs her little nose until it is as red as a cherry.

Someone asked her what she would like to do if she had a whole week to herself and she spent a long time speculating, finally reaching the decision that she would like a week of New York shows, with dinners and suppers at the exciting places but a little torn because she thought she would also enjoy a week in New England, near a brook. Then she realized suddenly that she actually had a whole week to herself recently and that she had spent it rapturously, sewing baby clothes, gardening and trying to learn to like mystery stories because Niven does. But, "I never can quite care who murdered whom, somehow. I guess it's because I didn't know him."

She won't commit herself about her favorite reading anyhow. "There are so many things I haven't read," she protests, "and so many things I want to read and I'm sure there are things of which I haven't even heard that I shall read some time."

SHE FEELS that her education is far from complete. She was born in New York City and went to grammar school there, afterward moving to Maplewood, New Jersey, where she attended the Rosehaven School for Girls. Despite the fact that no one in her family had ever been in show business (her father was an insurance salesman) she thinks she started to try to act when she was about eight and was told to see Baby Rose Marie on the centents. She imitated Rose Marie assiduously and after she had seen Mitzi Green she began to imitate everybody. She still does and people on sets where she works are congratulated at her not-always-too-kind mimicry of various Hollywood glamour girls. The first time she was ever in a real theater was when a teacher took her to see Cornelia Otis Skinner. The first play she ever saw was "Victoria Regina" with Helen Hayes, and she recalls it as the greatest experience of her life, the thing that made her grow up and gave her vague ambitions a sharp reality.

She studied at the Wharf Theater in Provincetown, where Bette Davis had studied, and she had a year or two on the road and along the straw-hat circuit before she got the role in "Life With Father" which was to make her famous. Contrary to what has been written too often, Teresa asserts that she did not walk plastically into Oscar Serlin's office, unannounced, and convince him out of hand that she was the girl for the role. "I went to see him by appointment, just as any other actress would. It was no great feat getting in to see Oscar. When he is casting he sees everyone. He had me read for him several times, just as he had a dozen other actresses do, and then he engaged me. Any other story you hear is nonsense:"

If she is in a group which talks "shop," that is, show business, she joins in eagerly. If the conversation is about something unfamiliar she listens avidly, storing away bits of information like a squirrel. In New York she was frequently with a group of people who surrounded Georges Barrère, the noted flautist, and she learned to appreciate Beethoven and was introduced to the charms of chamber music. Out of this has grown her passion for collecting fine recordings.

She likes to go to night clubs if they are fairly large and well ventilated but she detests small, "exclusive" stuffy ones. Often, in these places, people sit down at their table and outline story ideas for Niven. She just looks absent-minded while this goes on. But months later, if the subject arises, she knows the story by heart, almost word for word as it was told to them. What's more, she has definite opinions about it and her husband avers that her judgment is invariably sound.

She used to give away large sums of money quite haphazardly until Niven persuaded her to put her finances into the hands of a manager, who introduced her to that Nemesis—her allowance. It distresses her because she enjoys money and "what is the use of having it if you can't get at it?"

She thinks she hasn't any theories about how to achieve a happy marriage. "If you both work, then it is important that you admire and respect one another's activities. But then, it is even more important that you admire and respect each other. I think it must be important to put your marriage first, before any other concern, and that you try hard to remember all the things, the wise things, you've heard about good humor and optimism. After that... you just hope...."

"I seem to live," she concludes, helplessly, "in a state of perpetual confusion!"

Perhaps she does but you must admit—on Teresa it looks pretty!

Dear Baby

It is not unusual, my man, to have your cod liver oil with a lion cub in the yard, looking in through glass doors! Her name is Shah. Since she has long teeth and sharp claws you will never know her well. Your mother rescued her from a cage when she was about as big as you are. Now she has found a zoo in San Diego where they will let her roam in a five-acre park. If you are very persuasive you can probably get your Ma to take you down there one day to call on Shah.

Then too, you were offered a part in a picture before you had your eyes properly opened. And what did your mother do? She cried! It happened in the hospital where you and your mother were spending an extra week while your father tore the town apart to furnish two rooms in your new hillside home, and she cried for three days. First because she read in the papers that she wished you had been a girl. And then because they said she wanted you to be in a picture.

"First he'll think I didn't want him—then he'll think I wanted him to go right to work," your mother sobbed. And it is a heart rending sight to see your mother cry.

Anyway, let's get that straight. Your mother not only wanted you, but she knew you were a boy long before anyone else did. Mothers are never supposed to know for sure what they are going to get. But your mother did! At Christmas, long before you arrived she gave your father a book on lions, accompanied by a note saying, "and right this minute our son is jumping like mad." So you see?

And she is not even considering making you earn your keep. Your parents can manage very nicely without your help at present. And probably throw in a gold spoon or two if and when they finish buying circular taches for your living room and importing sandy loam from the San Fernando Valley so that your rocky hillside will produce a proper lawn for you to roll on when you reach that stage.

It will interest you to know that your father chaperoned you at your first party. There are treasonous reports circulating that he did some muttering about "me and the other mothers" and "feeling silly." These are unconfirmed and the facts remain. He did take you. Your mother had to do a radio show. And they are both too proud of you to send you alone with a nurse.

Perhaps your mother's pride in her ability to keep you shipshape (a chore he insisted he would never attempt before your actual arrival) influenced him. Or perhaps it was the wishes of your first hostess, one Stephanie Wanger by name. She is the daughter of Walter Wanger and Joan Bennett. The party was to celebrate Stephanie's fourth birthday.

Your mother tried to convince her that you were pretty little to be partying around and might not carry your end socially. "He can't even walk yet," she told Stephanie. "You just let him come," your prospective hostess begged. "He'll walk Thursday."

So your father agreed to take you but you fooled everyone and did not walk.

You were baptized at the age of seven weeks and you behaved extremely well! You were assisted by the fact that it was kept strictly a family affair. Your mother's twenty-year-old sister Rita became your godmother; your father's sixteen-year-old brother Peter, your godfather; your grandparents were the only witnesses; the same Jesuit priest who married your father and mother baptized you.

in the Church of the Blessed Sacrament where their nuptials were performed.

Still and all, swallowed in your streamer silks, bonneted and shod with silk booties, gifts of your mother's mama, you not only behaved yourself but managed a toothless smile when the priest brushed your lips with salt during the ceremony.

You have a good deal to smile over, my young friend. Your mother has given you a start that is not only unusual for a movie star's offspring, it is, unfortunately, all too unusual for most babies of today.

There were no bottles in your life until you were two months old. Your mother fed you as nature intended she should as long as it was possible. She has kept your basinet by her bed all night every night since she brought you to your new home. The loving care and attention you have had is that which comes only from a mother's overflowing heart.

Your father, too, is catching some of that overflow, usually at about 5:30 in the morning. It is your famous mother who puts you down, warm and full and happy, at 10:30 at night and who dashes sleepily to your rescue at 5:30 when you demand that the day begin. But it is your father who is prodded into wakefulness to keep you warm while she heats your bottle.

“I wouldn't really call it a full night's rest,” Paul Sr., has been heard muttering sleepily at his coffee cup as he prepares to face his plant, bright and brisk, at 9. "But it is an improvement over having the same performance at 2 a.m."

THEN there are mornings when he is called upon for more active service. If it is cold (and you will discover later that in selecting Southern California for your home you did not evade cold mornings) both you and your mother have been known to go back to sleep while your bottle heated, then boiled, and finally exploded on the kitchen stove. Then father's day begins with mopping down the ceiling.

Of course, there is Clarice on whom your mother claims she can see filmy dark wings. She is your nurse, but she also manages to keep your house clean, do some laundry and whip up a snack for your elders now and then.

At the moment you are the exclusive charge of your parents. And there probably never were two who got more fun and real joy out of a new arrival. But soon your mother will have to go back to her glamorous business.

You can start right now being as proud of her and her work as your father is. Maybe she had you in mind all the time, for there has never been a line, or a look, or anything in one of her pictures that was not just as clean and bright and gay as you are. And now you have a definite part in her career. For you are sending her back to her fans a little lovelier, a little more grown up, with a serenity and pride in her face that were never there before.

Already you seem to have sensed your responsibility. Already you reserve your temper, and they tell us you have a temper, for someone else. She never sees that love and till down until it covers your chin. When she hangs over your lacey basket and teases you about it, calls you her "little tough guy," she gets nothing but smiles and gurgles.

Keep it up, little Paul! You are now a most important member of a working team, a team with a big job and a lot of influence. For with your help, your lovely mother will go on making more people laugh and sing and forget themselves in this sorely troubled world. You may have to learn about that later but not if your mother and the rest of America's mothers can help it; and never, I hope, from your friend, Elaine St. Johns.
A "SECOND LOOK" GAL

Off the screen, AVA GARDNER looks like an attractive college girl. You'd hardly take her for a movie star. But, definitely, you'd notice her. That's because she has a certain something about her that draws admiring glances... You might first notice her light olive skin, as clean and soft as a baby's. Or it could be her reddish-brown hair, becomingly worn in a loose, shoulder-length glamour bob, tempting the wind to touch it playfully. Perhaps you'd notice the unconscious grace with which she walks and wears her clothes. When interviewed here in New York recently, she had on a gray checked suit, a pink sweater and a pink chiffon scarf pulled through an attractive gold scarf ring.

HEP TO BEAUTY TRICKS

AVA believes that one make-up color is not right for wear with every costume. She had on a pinkish shade of lipstick and nail polish which harmonized beautifully with the pink part of her outfit... A movie make-up man told her how to put on lipstick so that it doesn't smear easily. After applying it with a lipstick brush, she blots it by blotting on a tissue. Then, to set it, she moistens it with cologne. You might try this trick, to see if it works as well for you. Or you might like using one of the liquid lipstick sticks, which are claimed to stay on so well. Besides having more indelibility now, nail polishes and cream lipsticks may be made to last even longer by applying one of the new colorless liquid products, made especially for the purpose, over or under them. Ava's tan is fading. As it does, she switches to lighter powder shades. She suggests that you keep mixing a light face powder in with the darker shade you've been using. In this way, as your tan gradually disappears, your powder will match your changing skin tones. Then you can buy one of the luxurious new fall face powder shades... After the summer, too, she has a hair-conditioning treatment at the beauty parlor. If your hair needs one, she advises that you either have it given professionally, or get a special treatment cream or oil, and use it according to directions... Brush your hair a lot, Ava urges. This, she thoughtfully points out, is one good way to put glints in your hair, so that when he sees you there'll be a glint in his eyes!

All bolero suits offer a variety of costumes because of the many changes that can be achieved with belts and blouses. The Edith Head-Lizabeth Scott bolero suit offers all this—and is heavenly chic too with its flatteringly curved jacket. If you prefer a solid color we suggest the Duplex suitings in the new autumn colors shown above. Think, too, how attractive this suit would be for evening or cocktail wear made from velvet or satin with a long skirt and your waist wrapped in a wide soft cummerbund.
You'll want to read this story about Edith Head who designed the suits in this fashion section who protects the working girl

There's a Hollywood twist on the old refrain which says, "Heaven will protect the working girl." Hollywood says it's Edith Head who does the most heavenly job for those of us who work in factory, shop, office or our own home. She does this good deed by designing suits which can make a girl look simultaneously smart and romantic at a price which won't shatter a pocketbook.

Ten years back this heady Head girl became top designer at Paramount. She was the first woman to break the male monopoly of studio clothes creating. Reality could be Edith Head's middle name; reality and a sense of the good richness of everyday living. "I would rather design suits suited to the average girl than turn out six dozen long spangled evening gowns or straight glamour clothes," she says.

Her designs are a reproduction of her appearance and her dynamic personality, all three being very smart, smooth and sharp. She has straight black hair, large dark eyes, which she dramatizes with huge spectacles, is five feet two and weighs one hundred ten pounds. "Anything that looks good on me looks a lot better on a tall girl," she says. "I'm a very good guinea pig for my own designs—and sometimes when I want to put across an idea to Joan Caulfield or Lizabeth Scott or Barbara Stanwyck I wear it. They see me and say, 'That's exactly what I want for my next picture,' and on them, of course, it looks good."

On Edith it looks good, too, even if she is too clever to admit it. She is a very clever cookie anyhow and has an A.B. (Continued on page 91)

Californian Edith—Who Protects the Working Girl

(Continued from page 88) from the University of California, an M.A. from Stanford and speaks Spanish and French fluently. She was brought up in ghost towns throughout the West, her father being a silver mining engineer who always believed he'd unearth some treasure. Practical Edith dug in her own brains for her treasure—and it turned out to be pure gold.

Notice on the preceding pages, four of her newest suits, modeled by Joan Caulfield and Lizabeth Scott. "I'm so happy that copies of three of these suits are going to be in the stores," Edith says, "and that they are moderately priced; and that the fourth will be a Photoplay Pattern. These are the kind of clothes that I've always thought should be available to the types of girls who want to be smart but still must be practical. The feature I like most about these three suits is that they are "personalized." So many suits could be worn by a man if you used trousers instead of skirts. That shouldn't be."

Edie's favorite is the suit Joan Caulfield wears in "Welcome Stranger." Its "conversation point" is the sleeve pocket. It's a real pocket and any man whose soul isn't dead is bound to ask what it's for. And any cute girl will come up with the answer that it's for mad money. And if that doesn't get the talk started, you shouldn't have dated in the first place.

"This is a suit that any girl can wear," Edith says. "It is fitted because I believe a girl should show her figure. It is a rounded, feminine suit and it buttons high—as do the other two suits, so that it can be used effectively as a two-piece dress. I think a suit is the most necessary item of a girl's wardrobe, whether she's already an executive or still climbing."

EDITH is not using rounded shoulders in her suits because she thinks tailored things should be tailored. She is not, however, padding hips, a la Paris, but is using the nipped-in waist and is getting the rounded look about the hips by way of larger pockets. She is keeping skirts at an average of fourteen inches from the floor and does not believe they will go lower.

The "traditional" type of suit here shown on Lizabeth Scott is one which Miss Head feels is the best "background" outfit. In gray flannel with its little white turned-back cuff and turned-down collar, which can be buttoned on, it is capable of many changes through the use of accessories.

Joan Caulfield's "Dear Ruth" suit is on the dressmaker lines, meaning it is designed for more formal occasions—or those days when a girl goes straight from work to a party. Because of the cords that form a bib on the front, it looks like a particularly dashing dress, but if a girl chooses it for some occasion where she's going to remove the coat, Edith advises that a soft blouse—in chiffon or some similar material—be worn with it.

"None of these suits is so 'high-styled' that they will go out of fashion the moment they are purchased," Edith says. "With moderate care any girl can get several seasons from them. I'm happy I repeat, that these will sell at a nominal cost, but I advise, if you must budget, that your biggest investment go into suits and a nominal amount into dresses."

"There's one most exciting fact about the fashions being sold today. They are all, generally speaking, so well designed that any girl can be smart, if she will only use her brains."

Hollywood puts a twist on that, too. Hollywood says any girl can be smart who will use her Head.

That's Hollywood For You

(Continued from page 57) Knit Shop, and no one will bother them for their autographs. The shop girls don't get excited. These ladies are all citizens of Hollywood. They are expected to roam the streets, to go shopping. In New York or Boston or Washington, Greer Garson would be mobbed if she entered a large department store to make a purchase. But when Greer Garson walks into the Broadway-Hollywood, not an autograph hunter bothers her. In fact, when Miss Garson writes a check, the salesgirl has to take it to the department head to see if the signature is acceptable. This doesn't apply merely to Miss Garson. It goes for any player whose name is in lights.

For although Hollywood may be the glamour city to the other cities of the United States, the celebrities here are accepted. They are not a novelty act. Gene Kelly, if he drives through a red light, gets a ticket the same as—well, the same as Alan Ladd.

I am aware that Ava Gardner is progressing nicely in pictures ("The Hucksters" with King Gable is nice progress) but I still insist that Ava hasn't been photographed properly, and Ava probably agrees with me. She still looks better off the screen than on... If I had a million I'd give it to Jack Benny, because I'm tired of those jokes about cheapness. The worst part of it is that since it succeeds for Benny, other comics have now become cheap skates and the air is loaded with cheapness... I know that Charles Boyer is amused by the "Casbah" stuff, for although he did that picture years ago, impersonators haven't allowed him to leave the Casbah... I must admit that the oddest sight I ever saw on any set was the day I walked into the jungle of a Tarzan picture and spied Johnny Weissmuller playing gin rummy with the chimpanzee—and the chimpanzee was winning...

And since I mentioned gin rummy, I must mention Robert Harrari's remark. He said, "I just can't stop playing the game. I don't know what to do. Guess I'll have to join Gin Rummy Anonymous."

I still don't understand those campaigns for pictures which boast that they are giving you a "new" Van Johnson or a "new" Linda Darnell or a "new" Humphrey Bogart. As far as I'm concerned, there's nothing the matter with the Van, Linda or Humphrey who achieved stardom... I admire Paulette Goddard for many reasons, but chiefly because of all Charlie (I refuse to call him Charles) Chaplin's ex-leading ladies and ex-wives, Paulette is the only one who went on to make a name and big career for herself... I think June Allyson looks cute and dressed up whether she is wearing a gown or slacks. I believe certain girls can look neat in slacks. Sue me!... Tom Jenk, who should know about wolves, Hollywood brand, told me about the wolf who made the approach by saying, "Let's sit down and have a man-to-girl talk."

I know that there are certain cliche scenes in pictures which are accepted by the audience, but if they weren't, the pictures couldn't go on. Audiences are nice people who make themselves believe certain scenes. You are at a movie. The scene is a dreary old house, a million miles from nowhere, and five people have already been murdered by an unseen maniac. The beautiful girl gets a note saying she's next on the list. Do the six people who are still alive guard her through the night? No. Does she call the police? No. Here's what she does: She insists on staying in her own bedroom-alone. She leaves her door unlocked. She goes to the French windows and opens them. Then she crawls into bed and waits for the manic, who arrives on schedule.

You are at another movie, accepting another cliche sequence. A hundred outlaws and a hundred ranchers are killing each other off as a big gun battle progresses on the dusty street of a western town. On the ranchers' side, the hero searches this no-cowboy's land for sight of the villain. On the outlaws' side, the villain is doing the same thing. Slowly they walk toward each other, as shots fly wildly all about them. But the outlaws don't shoot at the hero because the villain wants him. And the villain remains unscathed because he's the hero's target. In Hollywood, you must understand, bullets take direction just as well as actors. That's what makes the movies so entertaining!

I couldn't name an actor who has handled his career better than Ronald Colman. He has lasted as long as any and holds a dignified position in the industry. Yet can you imagine Victor Mature trying to handle himself in the same manner? Where would he be? . . . I know I shouldn't let you in on this secret, but I'm going to: Betty Hutton relaxes . . . There are singers and singers and practically all of them have gotten around to "The September Song," but for my money none of the voices sing it with the feeling that Walter Huston does, and he is not a singer . . . . I saw Gary Cooper and Jimmy Stewart standing next to each other at a party, and I couldn't decide whether Cooper or Stewart was the more typical "typical average American" type. Come to think of it, the average American lad isn't that tall, Mr. Capra! . . . Ray Milland, who has an Oscar, in talking about it with me, said, "The Academy Award is a very important thing in Hollywood, especially with headwaiters."

I am often more entertained by the dramatic critics than they are by the plays they review. For example, they praised Ingrid Bergman when she returned to the stage in "Joan of Lorraine," but they gave no credit to Hollywood and the movies. However, let any player return to Broadway and be a flop or appear in a flop play, and immediately Hollywood and the movies are blamed . . . . I wish Metro would do better by Ann Sothern than those "Maisie" pictures, and I'll bet Ann Sothern wishes so, too . . . . It's getting so that when I go on a movie set and play "Truth or Falsie" while watching the actresses emote, my I.Q. is good enough to place me on "Information Please" . . . . I must tell you about the night Claudette Colbert was, dancing at Mocambo and saw her cameraman there. "What are you doing here?" she asked. "You should be home getting some sleep. You have to photograph me tomorrow."

And that's Hollywood for you.

Eternally Claudette

Every few years Hollywood produces a First Lady of the American Screen. Ordinarily this monumental actress has specialized in high drama in which she has lived or died in anguish requiring tons of make-up.

No publicist has ever been harsh enough to describe Claudette Colbert as a First Lady—she would have laughed into the gentleman’s eyes with an intonation saying, “Oh, come now!”—but her unchanging popularity has outlasted the prestige of an imposing series of touted queens.

Not that Claudette is without many well-earned superlatives of her own. She is unchallenged claimant to the title of Actress Who Has Maintained The Same Hair-do For The Longest Time.

When Claudette emerged from her De Mille or “Cleopatra” era, her hair was styled in its celebrated halo bob. She liked it. In her opinion the coiffure had everything: It was becoming, it was timeless, it was easy to keep groomed, it made coiffure testing for each new picture unnecessary.

With the sunny satisfaction of a woman who knows her own mind, Claudette settled on the hair-do and hasn’t changed since. In one or two pictures, a side part has been introduced and in the early sequences of “Tomorrow Is Forever” a switch was added in deference to the picture’s period. But aside from such minor departures, the Colbert hair-do has become as much her trademark as her pert, tip-tilted nose.

Don’t think that this adherence to comfort and convenience has passed without controversy. Fans, by the thousands, have both commended and chided Claudette upon the style and for sticking to it.

Incidentally, Claudette Colbert is the year-in, year-out recipient of more fan mail than is received by any other actress. Even before she undertook the sponsorship of Photoplay’s “What Should I Do?” department, Claudette was a Hollywood stamp champ.

As a Child Claudette didn’t intend to be an actress at all, but a ballet dancer. She had returned from a dancing lesson one afternoon and was playing ball, when she was struck by a truck. Result: Four months in a hospital with one leg—broken in three places—in traction. This position inhibited almost all activities except talking and singing. So, after a visit from her father who was a music lover, Claudette decided to become an opera singer.

This plan persisted until Claudette went ice skating one winter, caught a cold which turned into laryngitis, and discovered—when she was able to speak for the first time several weeks later—that she couldn’t sing a note. But an interesting thing had happened to her speaking voice: It wasn’t exactly husky, but it had acquired an edge, an intonation that was unique. For some reason, it made almost anything she said under pressure of emotion seem funny. She developed a pleasant reputation as the school wit, simply by saying “Really?” in that breathless and astonished tone. And with such an advantage, it occurred to Claudette and her family that she should become a comedian.

In the intervening years, Claudette has gained an enviable Hollywood reputation for her humor, but her off-screen wit does not rely upon quaint delivery alone for its authority. She is an able polisher of the whimsy.

In “The Egg and I,” she had to spend the greater part of two days in the quagmire of the ranch sty while a sequence with a pig was filmed. At the end of the second day, she stepped out of the dark brown slush, cold, wet, tired, and begrimed. Catching sight of herself in a mirror she observed, “I always knew it was a lie. No mud bath ever improved anyone.”

Don Ameche was once complaining bitterly on the set of “Guest Wife” that Claudette’s dressing room was filled with flowers, but that no one ever sent an actor flowers to congratulate him upon the start of a new picture.

Claudette sneaked onto the set next door and found a cracked, nondescript old vase filled with dusty artificial flowers. This she had delivered, by special messenger, to Don’s dressing room.

That afternoon a flurried prop man showed up, in search of the vase. He explained that this particular vase was needed for a picture being shot on the set next door and unless it could be located, the entire sequence would have to be rephotographed, a procedure costing thousands of dollars.

Horrified, Claudette hurried to Don’s dressing room. The vase was gone. A frenzied phone call to the studio gate supplied the information that Don, on his way home, had told the gate man about the “gift” and had taken it to show his wife.

There was nothing to do except dispatch a messenger (at Claudette’s expense) to the Ameche home to reclaim the battered prop. After a lapse of two nervous hours, and the expenditure of large cash, the vase was returned.

The next morning she learned that Don had rigged the whole thing. Nobody gave a hang for the vase. Nobody needed it. Except Don—to rib his co-star. To this day, Claudette is still planning revenge.

WHEN Claudette was working in “Remember the Day,” one sequence was taken in a schoolroom in which thirty-five junior extras were working. Claudette wasn’t happy with the dialogue in the first place, and she felt that she wasn’t enacting the scene sensitively in the second. Seated at one of the front desks was a disdainful child who fastened her gaze upon Claudette and studied her every gesture with critical eyebrows. Claudette began to get jitters, king-size.

When the camera had to be reloaded, Claudette went to her dressing room, found herself too restless and puzzled to remain there, and wandered back to the set. Unnoticed, she came upon the absorbed group of youngsters, who were listening, spellbound, to the disdainful child imitating Claudette Colbert. The lampoon was deadly and the childish audience giggled in wicked delight.

So did Claudette, tiptoeing away before she was seen. Someone observed, upon hearing this story, "You were a good sport, not to have said anything about the little upstart mimicking you."

Claudette's answer was swift: "Not at all. If I'd been certain that the girl would have understood me, instead of being humiliated, I would have thanked her. You see, she showed me exactly what I was doing that was wrong. When we went back into the scene, I played it in a totally different way—and knew instinctively that I had done it right, at last."

When she and Walter Pidgeon were cast in "The Secret Heart," Mr. Pidgeon—who had never met Claudette—asked casually here and there how she was to work with. Four or five people said, "She's conscientious. She's always on the set on time, and she always knows her lines. She doesn't blow once in a blue moon, and she'll give you the best reaction to your own lines that you've ever had. She's a fine actress and a swell gal. Between scenes she'll talk you into playing charades. She's a whiz at it."

So Mr. Walter Pidgeon met Miss Claudette Colbert, and the two got on famously exchanging wisecracks, playing charades and rehearsing scenes. After several days' shooting, Pidge met one of those whom he had previously questioned. "Well, how are you two getting along?" he was asked.

Pidge grabbed his friend's arm. "Everything you said was right. She's wonderful. But, Great Scott, man, why didn't you tell me she had the best figure in town?"

CLAUDETTE is one of the few actresses who looks, in person, exactly as she does on the screen with the exception that black and white film does not do her coloring justice. Her hair is a dark auburn, her eyes are a flecked brown and her skin is olive with a faint rosy highlight.

Around the house she likes to wear red, pink, or deep rose hostess gowns—garments, usually, that she has worn in a picture, admired, and bought from an indulgent wardrobe department since there are few people tiny enough to make secondary use of her picture clothes.

The home, into which these lush gowns fit beautifully, is one of the handsomest, not only in Hollywood, but in the entire country, and it is furnished in exquisite taste. The general feeling of the white frame, two-story house is traditional, but the huge den in which most of Claudette's informal entertaining is done is entirely modern. The rugs are gray shag, two of the lounges are figured (gray, red and chartreuse), and the other two lounges are cherry red. Two of the lamps consist of converted, antique Chinese tea canisters. The fireplace is faced with black marble, and the broad mantel is of hand-carved, bleached oak. On the mantel stand six antique, hand-carved coral figurines which would represent a prized acquisition to any museum. In this room there is also a concealed projection machine so situated as to allow a thirty-five foot throw onto a huge roll-down screen.

Claudette's marriage (to Dr. Joel Pressman on December 24, 1936), like her career and her home, has received her devoted concentration, her high determination to make it succeed. An easy task, actually, because Dr. Pressman (she calls him Jack) and Claudette are deeply in love, share a keen sense of humor and honestly nourish a deep interest in both the theatrical and the medical professions.

It is well-known that Claudette has won several championship awards for her slalom racing, but it is not so well-known that it was Jack Pressman who started her skiing career. The Pressmans went to Yosemite National Park on their honey-

Gay Gadabouts

There were about two hundred guests at another of those fancy Atwater Kent shindigs—a formal one. But no one wore a lovelier evening gown than Janis Paige, who was with Michael North—for the 'teenth time. But a couple of nights later I saw him at Mocambo with Sonja Henie. Janis's heavy sky-blue crepe was ballet length, very decollete, tiny sleeved, basked—bodiced and very full skirted. When people admired it, she broke down and confessed that her stand-in had made it for her! Dotty Lamour was there in simple black, and instead of wearing her diamond clip pinned to her dress, it was clamped to the center of a tiny black velvet bow which tied the narrow black velvet ribbon around her throat. The Alan Ladds, the Sonny Tufts (he played bartender for about two hours), Dana Clark, Joyce Reynolds, were just some of the crowd who dined on the lovely outdoor terrace, overlooking the whole of Beverly Hills and Bel-Air. You can bet Evie Johnson was glad it was cool enough out there to wear that terrific new blonde mink coat that Van just gave her. He said, "That's my suspension present to Evie." Perfectly matched pelts for this coat which is three-quarter length, swing-backed and has enormous balloon sleeves that can be worn wrist-length or pushed up to the elbows to look even more enormous. A knockout!

Marguerite Chapman's off-the-shoulder dark brown taffeta dress that Don Loper designed for her is a thing of charm. The tiny frill of coffee colored lace shows at the bottom of the full skirt and around the neckline of draped brown velvet. With it she wears hand-made matching "shorty" gloves of the same brown velvet.

Before we get out of the "after dark" department there's a floaty new dress of Betty Hutton's that just screams out for description. It's of sea-green chiffon—yards and yards of it. And she looks like a Grecian damsel in it. The bodice, designed with an extremely low back and neckline, draped artistically over one shoulder and is rather high-waisted. The full skirt is accordion pleated and features a faint design scrolled with iridescent sequins. The whole effect is glowing and so feminine. Betty wears evening sandals of a slightly deeper green satin with this gown and carries a matching pouch-bag of velvet.

The Hollywood blades are raving over the looks of newcomer Paulee Croset. But we're raving about a dress that Dede Johnson designed for Paule that's just perfect for early fall days. Soft green wool gabardine—in a shirtkmaker style with French cuffs and collar. The dress has a fly front and a full skirt that is belted. But being the color that it is, the dress can sport brown, dark blue or black leather belts. The knockout touch is her coat of Australian Possum—so soft, so furry and yet so absolutely right for daytime wear.

And while on the subject of wools—there are two more worth a note. Gail Patrick's brown gabardine with its very different turn-back collar and yoke, edged in beige felt; and the V-flaps on the pockets. To say nothing of the brown and beige crocheted gloves Gail wears with this outfit. And Ann Blyth liked that plaid wool dress she wore in "Brute Force" so much she bought it from the studio for her own wardrobe. The colors are red, blue and black and the full skirt has an extended high waistband. It also has a fitted jacket with green velvet buttons and collar.

"Dancing in the Dark" is the title Marusia has given the divine sapphire blue dress that Janis Carter is wowing 'em with. It's one of those lavish numbers that proves the slim dresses of the war period are a thing very much of the past. This one boasts an eight-yard skirt embroidered in self-colored beads. With it Janis wears a gold and sapphire necklace from Hobe.

While on things lavish, Betty Avery (and lots of people think she'll be Mrs. Tony Martin one day soon) breezed back from Paris and into Mocambo with Tony, wearing a really exciting dinner dress, designed especially for her. The new shorter length, and Spanish in spirit, it's heavily beaded along its scalloped hemline. It's of black net over white satin topped with an off-shoulder, tulle-shawled bodice. Soooo effective!

GREER GARSON has a new fall evening coat that's just too lovely to take off. And with her flaming tresses, you can imagine the effect. Fashioned of Watteau-gray heavy silk faille it has elbow length balloon sleeves and the season's fullest "skirt" which is peignoir in silhouette. She can wear it, of course, with a gown of just about any shade but beige or brown.

Gray seems to be much in favor right now. It crops forth here again because of the wonderful gray velveteen trousers which are the lower half of a lounging costume that Alexis Smith has. The trousers have a wide waistband and narrow, tapering legs. With it she wears a long-sleeved white silk blouse with a ruffled shirt front, and occasionally a very short purple velveteen bolero jacket. Gold kid harem slippers on her feet.

One of the designers for a new shop has come out with a "miracle" idea for skirts that is made of elastic—and is such a good idea that Zukin, who dreamed it up, is patenting it—and you'll be able to get one no matter where you live. The skirt has an elastic trick top that not only holds the skirt up, but holds the blouse down and flatters the figure into the bargain! The skirts will be on the market in time to round out back-to-school wardrobes—or for just plain shirt'n'skirt addicts.

Two California jewelers (Joseff and Bea Norton) have brought out "wingbacks," fascinating little contraptions which, when attached to your earrings, keep them firmly anchored to your ears—and very comfortable too. A little gimmick comes around under the ear and fits neatly and invisibly behind it.

Someone sent Susan Peters a pair of glamour dice—in fact it was one of the vets at Birmingham Hospital—probably encouraged by the wonderful news that Susan is starring in a picture ("Sign of the Ram") again—even though she plays her entire role from a wheel chair. Anyway, she still finds time to visit these wounded vets and she's so tickled with this particular gift (the dice are tiny ebony ones, with her initials set in in fine gold wire) that she's having the cubes made into earrings.

Susan isn't the only one with a push for something new in gimmicks. Edgar Hegen's pretty Mrs. has a new charm bracelet made entirely of antique watch fobs—set with tiny precious stones. She's been years collecting the dozen or so she has now. If you like the idea, a little hunting around for simpler unjeweled ones might be rewarding. They make a stunning, "important looking" arm decoration.

Cable From Paris

Annabella, the first star I saw in Paris, sent me lovely red roses upon my arrival and the next day came to see me. She looks younger and prettier and seems gayer than she was in America. It is hard to realize that she is the mother of a sixteen-year-old daughter.

I was curious, naturally, to know if Annabella was divorcing Tyrone Power and when the "Rena-vation" would occur. She laughed at my blunt question and, shrugging her shoulders, replied "I have no idea at this time when I will divorce Tyrone. Or where! Or if I would be only too happy to make him happy."

During the summer months Annabella was busy making a picture in Paris. Then she planned to do over her little house at St. Cloud. The Germans who occupied it during the war had treated it horribly.

"In October, however," she told me, "I will return to California. I am due then to make a picture for Twentieth Century Fox. Until that time Millicent Rogers has my house in Brentwood."

This house, you know, was part of Tyrone's munificent settlement upon Annabella. He gave her nearly everything he possessed. Actually he has started over again from the bottom of the ladder although artistically he is at the top.

Tyrone and I have remained great friends," Annabella reminded me the day we talked. "We will decide what to do and how to do it."

However, it is my impression, gleaned over a period of time and several conversations with Annabella, that she wished to not wait to divorce Tyrone and thus determine if he is seriously enough interested in anyone to marry.

Her attitude toward him is maternal. Obviously she considers him quite young and lacking in worldly experience. He had after all, little time to sow wild oats and learn his way about. Almost as soon as he became one of the favorite romantic actors on the screen he and Annabella were married. Then the war came. When he returned, an unsung hero because he hates personal publicity, they went on a second honeymoon to Canada to ski. There they confirmed what they previously had feared, that they had reached the end of the rainbow, that the dream was over.

All this, I am sure, has influenced Annabella to let Tyrone go it alone for a time and do his own thinking. And I am not sure that Tyrone too, so far at least, has not taken a philosophic view of the situation. He writes to Annabella regularly and she to him. In fact the photographs have shown her of many sequences from "Captain from Castile," the picture he made in Mexico, betray an intimacy and understanding that is surprising even in these modern times.

Therefore, to that perpetual question "Are Annabella and Tyrone going to divorce?" I have no definite answer. My guess would be "Not now." However, should Tyrone decide he wishes to be legally free and come to Annabella in Paris with such a request it likely would be granted.

RITA HAYWORTH was in Europe too—until she went over to London to meet David Niven. Rita, whom I have long admired has, I confess, disappointed me. The French still think she is beautiful and a dream girl. But they do not like the idea of announcing in the press that a star will appear at a benefit or charity bazaar, of giving her considerable personal publicity on this score then having her fail to appear. Rita did this more than once. Three large charity affairs I attended found her among the missing although she had promised to attend.

Neither did Rita go to the banquet given on the last night of the Film Festival in Brussels by the Regent Prince Charles, brother of King Leopold in exile—or a luncheon the following day given by that wonderful man, Paul Henri Spaak, Prime Minister of Belgium. She had promised to be present on both occasions but instead chose to linger on in Switzerland.

All of this left George McCarthy, Eric Johnston's representative for European films without an American star for the most important festival since the war. Left him in that spot just twenty-four hours before the event. Paulette already had returned to England. Sonja had sailed for the United States. And Linda was being psychoanalyzed in Zurich. Whereupon McCarthy telephoned Marlene Dietrich, who said he might see her at once. He found her in pajamas on the terrace of her hotel enjoying her morning coffee.

Marlene gave him no time to blurt out his trouble. Fixing him with large limpid eyes she said, "So, in the end you always have to come to mama." She had heard, you see, of his dilemma.

Then to end his misery she added quickly, "Of course I shall come. I am an American citizen and this is an American problem. And even if I am asked at the last moment my answer still is yes."

So she packed her best dress and went off to Brussels. The next night she appeared on the rug of Prince Charles and made herself so attractive that he went quite wild about her. In fact she was called away from the Prime Minister's luncheon the next day four times. Over and over Prince Charles must telephone to express his undying gratitude for her coming. Furthermore, this autumn Marlene will return to Brussels—to receive the highest decoration that Belgium has to offer. Rita might have had it had she been as gracious and realistic as "the trained horse in the circus." which is Marlene's way of referring to herself.

I rejoice to see our stars working and holidaying in England and on the Continent. Such travel cannot fail to help them keep their perspective—not an easy thing to do when you are as exploited as the stars are. Also, inevitably, it will help them become greater human beings and, by the same token, greater artists.

Then you think he is through? I put in quickly.
"Not through," he replied, "but stymied. Until Parks is given a role in which he can express his own personality, he's in the same spot as any other newcomer who has not yet proved himself."
"But he's a star," I argued, "I get as much mail about Larry as I do about any other star on the screen."
"Yes," he agreed. "He is a star—without a personality he can call his own. That's the frustrating thing about it. He's basking in all the fame and glory Hollywood can bestow on a player but he's got to fight the rest of the way just as hard as if he were in the extra ranks!"
I quote this man's remarks in such detail because it is the opinion of many people in this town who are supposed to know their movie onions.
But it isn't my opinion—and I'll tell you why. I have talked with Larry Parks. And I have talked with the man who holds his contract, Harry Cohn—the producer who made him a star and with whom Larry is now squabbling.
If this dispute between them is a "trade" story (I mean by that, a business argument that is not supposed to interest the fans as much as love and romance stories about Hollywood), then I say it is a trade story with a great big heartache behind it. Can a boy have everything that Hollywood stands for put before him on a silver tray? And then, before his eager hands can grasp and steady it, have the tray tipped over and be left as hungry for success as he was before? That is personal—not "trade"—tragedy. Better not to have been invited to the laden board than to get there and find the good things are papier-mâché.

I thought of that all the time I was talking with Larry the day he came to my house and we thrashed out all these things around an umbrella table in my garden.
Yes, there is a change in him since the last time we talked. The first interview we had was just before the release of "The Jolson Story," and this kid had been jumping and jiving. It wasn't Al Jolson's personality he turned on me full force in the first flush of anticipatory fame after years of striving. It was Larry's own brand of enthusiasm coming out of him.
Even now, depressed and unsettled as he is, something of that same spark remains. But he is puzzled, bewildered and discouraged. The spark isn't out—but it has been dimmed by the events of the past seven months. There is a look of strain around his boyish mouth and brown eyes. I asked him what he thought had happened to upset the applecart?
He was twisting a soft drink around in his hands, looking at it, not drinking it much. His voice was soft and unexcited as he answered:
"I think it was a mistake to put me into Rita Hayworth's picture and allow me to sing with my own voice. The impression of 'The Jolson Story' was too fresh, too recent. Many people who do not follow inside stories about picture making, never knew that it was Al's voice on the sound track when I sang. And it came as a shock and a surprise to hear me singing in a totally different way."
"But, Larry," I protested, "you can't go on forever with Al's voice behind you."
"I know that," he replied quickly. "The mistake was having me sing at all!"
"Then from 'Down to Earth' (Rita's picture) I went into 'The Swordsman,' a costume, swashbuckling movie. That isn't my cup of tea, either."
Being a girl who likes to get down to cases, I asked, "What is your dish of tea?"
"Comedy, I think," he said, "polite comedy with a note of brashness."
Still on the firing line, I put in, "Do you know a lot of people are calling you ungrateful because you have said you are thinking of taking your troubles with Columbia to court? Do you know they are saying that you had a chance in twenty or thirty movies before 'The Jolson Story' came along and you were given the opportunity to hit the top?"
"Yes," he replied, slowly, "I know that. But my movie affairs are in the hands of my agent and my lawyer. I'll do what they say. For the sake of my physical and mental health, I must get rid of this--" he repeated, "I must get out of this rut!"
He had put the drink down on the table now, untouched, and while his voice was even and steady there was a current of emotion running through his words deeper than any lines he spoke in "The Jolson Story."
"You see," he said, simply, "this isn't the first time I've had to fight to keep the thing I want."
There wasn't the slightest iota of self-sympathy in his voice when he added, "Most things--even good things--have been acquired the hard way with me. With some of us--it's like that always."
"I had to laugh when many of the fans wrote me about my 'overnight' success. Why I have been hammering away, trying to get someplace in more unimportant stage jobs than you could list in one magazine story. I've played thirty--yes, I mean thirty--movie roles, some of them just bits, it's true, but when married folks overcome these things and get a real break--they are on their way. But I'm almost back where I started from--except for one shot in the spotlight."

"AND before that, Larry," I asked, "were there other things that came the hard way?"
He said, "Almost from the time I can remember. When I was a kid, I came down with rheumatic fever and left me with a weak heart. It left me an easy mark for an illness that paralyzed me and made one of my legs shorter than the other. It made me sick when I thought of myself, and then saw other kids playing baseball, football, and running around on even on legs. And, then my mother instilled in me the will to fight. So, for several years I devoted myself to exercise and corrective treatment, so that I might be as strong and normal as other kids."
It was while he was attending the University of Illinois with the intention of becoming a doctor, that he was injected with the acting bug. "I was exposed to it during a campus play," he laughed. "I got great reviews in the college paper. The amateur critic predicted that achieving success on the stage would be easy for me. He should know!"
"Well, Larry," I interposed, "at least your marriage to pretty little Betty Garrett has been a bright mark along your way."
"Our love has been a bright mark," he corrected, "but we have had to fight to keep every bit of happiness we have found. You know, of course, I married Betty just two days before we had to be separated. She had been signed for a wonderful part on Broadway in the Cole Porter show, 'Something for the Boys.' It was the break she had been waiting for all her life.

"I had just signed a contract out here. We didn't know what to do. Then we talked it all over and decided that, in spite of the separation this meant, we would risk a long-distance marriage. I didn't want to find Betty--just to lose her!"
Glamour in Chenille

At $4.99 prepaid this cuddly Rainbow Chenille is priced to beat any store in the country by $1.00!

What a cycle this boy's life has run! Love, marriage and career—a constant fight to hold what he has found!

For two years, Larry and Betty caught only casual glances at one another and then only when they could sneak off from Broadway to spend a day or week-end with him, or he could catch a plane there. As more success came to him in "Call Me Mister," and he clicked in Hollywood, their visits together were less frequent. Then, when they were almost miserable with worry over their long separations—Betty was signed on a movie contract and came here to live with him in his small hillside home.

"BUT as bad as that was when you were separated and as much as you had to fight for health as a child—you see those problems had a happy ending," I told him.

"I know," he said quickly with a flash of the old enthusiasm, "that is what gives me heart and courage now, while I am facing the question mark of where I go from here in my career. I have to believe that there is a happy solution ahead—or I haven't the heart for the fight."

Long after he left me that day, I thought about Larry and his worries—so much so that I finally decided to call Harry Cohn, the man who knows better than anyone else what will happen to him because he holds his contract.

He is an old friend of mine and is considered by many people to be a very explosive gentleman. But I have always found him to be fair and above everything else, honest. I told him I wanted him to be honest with me when I asked, "What do you really think is ahead for Larry Parks? Come on and tell me the truth, even if there may be legal trouble with him."

And I hope before Larry takes any step he may regret he will read here what his boss told me—and be guided by it.

Harry Cohn said, "I believe in the boy and want him to know what he is saying and thinking. He claims it was a mistake to put him in a picture where he had to sing with his own voice following 'Jolson.' But we had to attempt to establish his own personality as soon as possible."

"And as you know, he exhibited a great amount of verve and animation in 'Jolson' and we tried to play up this facet of his screen character in 'The Swordsmen.' These experiments with the kid have yet to be released—so who knows yet whether they are successful. Because he doesn't think so doesn't prove the point."

"We are going to keep on striving to find just the right thing for Larry Parks because any simpleton would realize it is just as much to our interests as to his, to keep him on top as a star."

"But, in the long run, the answer lies with the public. The people who buy the tickets have been making stars from the beginning of movie history—and they are the final judges. We will do all we can. Speaking for our entire studio—we are for Larry Parks. But the very fans who put him on top are the very ones who hold the answer to his future."

Thanks, Harry. That's straight from the shoulder.

Now, I ask you, and you—WELL?

The End

An epic story about an epic guy! Don't miss Louella Parson's smash interview with Clark Gable in November Photoplay
Get Me

(Continued from page 39) I'm still on Broadway hours. I manage to get to sleep by three o'clock in the morning and if it's a day when I have to get to the studio by quarter of eight, I feel it and look it. But I relax, and read everything I can get my hands on. If I'm not careful, I'll begin to improve my mind.

I was born in Rochester, New York, the youngest in a family of seven. I left school at the age of fourteen to seek my fame and fortune and I always pretended I was older than I was. Pretty soon I shall reach the point where I'll have to do a switch on that routine. It wasn't until 1939 that I accidentally became an actor and in between I did a bit of everything. For awhile I was in advertising as we elegantly call it in the trade and for another stretch I worked at CBS in one of those jobs where you are a combination of stage hand, writer, director, actor, announcer and vice president for $20 a week.

It was at CBS and for television that Arthur Murray taught me dancing—but not in a hurry. I think he picked me to demonstrate his magic step because I was the clumsiest human he could imagine. For hour after hour, in front of that television camera, I kept right on having two left feet. Marie, my wife, insists that I dance "quite well" now, but that's her flattery. She's prejudiced.

We celebrated our fifth wedding anniversary this past August. Marie and I met on a blind date and I fell in love after one look—and why not? I was a kind of a Broadway actor then. I'd drifted into acting because a friend of mine was directing "Waiting for Lefty." He wanted somebody with a loud voice to play a part and wheedled me into it. I was all right during rehearsals but on opening night I drank an entire flask of Martinis before I got up nerve enough to walk on stage and face the audience.

That started me, though, and some good parts came along. Finally "The Hasty Heart" cinched it for me, and I got to Hollywood.

But, I was hanging around with a bunch of other Thespians when I met Marie. I'd gone up to friend's house and there was this black-haired glamour girl looking at me. After that, I wasn't aware of one thing until at the end of the evening she asked, "Will you come again?"

I said, "I will, if you're going to be here."

That began it, and after two years of going together we got married—and then had a bachelor's honeymoon.

What caused that was the date. It was 1942, and the war years. Marie was posing for Conover in New York. I was writing an Army radio program called "Cheers from the Camps." We got married in Baltimore. That night Marie had to fly back to New York for an engagement and our show was shipped out. We've had many separations ever since.

Marie, in fact, got a chance at pictures long before I did. She was signed by RKO and was in Hollywood for seven months. Then she quit her contract and rejoined me, I'm pleased and flattered to report. She insists I'm interested about everything but her.

I'm embarrassed at showing emotion, which is the Scandinavian in me. But I confess here to a fact that I cry at movies. I'm moody, and sometimes begin hugging around to myself, carrying the weight of the world on my shoulders and suffering for all humanity.

I'm a poor "mischer," Marie and I stay by ourselves a great deal, possibly too much. But I wouldn't be telling the truth.
If I didn't say that I'm keen for California. I may even get around to the point where I'll wear bright shirts. I've got one bright yellow coat. I've had it for months. But I haven't had the courage to take it out of the closet. I always wear solid-color neckties and shirts.

I'm an illiterate eater. I don't like onions or garlic and only Marie's forcing has made me consume any vegetables. Left to myself I would eat nothing but steak and potatoes, washed down with a candy bar, a sauce of soft drinks, plus much coffee with three teaspoons of sugar per cup. As you might surmise from this, I've known to have trouble, at times, with my stomach.

IDEALLY I'd like to gravitate between the stage and screen, as Freddie March does. That's because I think I am more of a character actor than the great, big hero type. I feel as though I am sailing under false colors. I've gone to the bosses and said, "Can't there be some reason in these pictures why the girl falls for me? I mean, couldn't I have a lot of money or be kind to animals or something?"

Seeing my kissers on screen always reminds me of a story that Roger Pryor used to tell about himself. He was in a play and his entrance was due when the heroine said, "Here he is now. Doesn't he look like a savage god?"

Roger pleaded with her to do something about that line. He's a good looking man, but he knew he was no Adonis, and he felt that once the audience got a look at him, after that crack, he was dead for the evening. So he argued with the star, with the result that on the opening night she said, "Here he is now. Doesn't he look like a savage—God?"

But I might get a screen part where I have some real excuse for being, and you can't tell what that might do to me.

As a matter of fact, Charlie Brackett and Billy Wilder encouraged me to write a few trial scenes for their next picture, "Operation Candy Bar" which stars Jean Arthur and Marlene Dietrich in the girl section and yours truly opposite. So there's no telling where that might lead. An actor stirring around among the adjectives is an always unpredictable creature.

To sum it up, I guess I'm the kind of bewildered guy who takes the other un-bewildered guys seriously. But I can't seem to take myself that way. I get spells of being convinced that if I could I'd be Napoleon. But there's one danger there. Let that happen and I'd probably be just as dead as he is.

So I'm letting well enough alone, meanwhile spending my sleepless nights trying to figure out some way to make my eyes look as big on screen as Joan Crawford's.

Conversation Piece

(Continued from page 62) They're the mainstay of her wardrobe, since she wears nothing but suits or slacks. "It doesn't matter whether I tramp around all day on location with Bogie, spend a week end with him on our boat, or go to a fancy party," says she, "I still wear my blouses.

And they're really my blouses. I select the materials myself and have them made. They're all long-sleeved, and if I find a particularly fine design I have it copied in several different colors. My pet design is fashioned after a man's shirt, with the starkness softened by quilted cuffs, quilted collar, and quilted bosom fronts. You have no idea how people ask me about those blouses, too!"

Since she has so many more blouses than the average girl, Lauren's method of caring for them is different to most of us. Instead of folding them in bureau drawers, she arranges them on quilted hangers in a long wardrobe, according to color. The white ones, the printed ones, and the colored ones are all grouped separately," says Lauren, "and because they're on hangers, they're always fresh."

There's an example of my gals, of combining both a personality quirk and a conversation piece.

AND HERE'S yet another Hollywood conversation piece—a tip on jewelry. It's also one all of us could adapt to our own personalities, although it's originally due to Nancy Guild's quick thinking. Nancy knows her own type, and dresses accordingly. For instance, she buys plain belts and bags, and then dresses them up with interesting gold or silver crests that match. This way she can interchange the crests and pins her accessories at will.

"It's true that my belts and bags are conversation pieces wherever I go," says Nancy, "but my biggest conversation piece is the one I thought about least. I have an old pocket in a chain that has been in my family for years—I guess everyone has one. Well, instead of wearing it as a lapel pin or around my neck, I wear mine in my hair. I tried it one day by mistake, and I've been doing it ever since on purpose! I pull back my hair as if I were going to clip on a barette, and then I pin the locket in back and wind its gold chain around the bunched hair. Simple as it is, everyone asks me about it wherever I go!" And wherever she goes, it is a sign of Nancy Guild, and only Nancy!

Betty Hutton has a conversation piece that she owes to her husband Ted Briskin. He presented it when Lindsay Duke was born, and everyone notices it the minute Betty enters a room. It's a jewelry piece fitting into the pocket of her suit, shaped exactly like a folded pocket handkerchief—only it's gold, fringed with filmy gold mesh embroidered with tiny diamonds. Someone—whether in one of the huck shops (or a handy huck shop) we might each discover a bit of antique gold mesh that would do as well!

But here's still another idea—this one thanks to Catherine McLeod. Her fiancé is often away on business, so that she has to go to Hollywood parties alone—and minus the lovely floral corsages he always sends her when they're together. "But I've worked that out," says Catherine, "by making my own corsages—out of fresh flowers! One of my most successful was a corsage of red and yellow roses. The flowers have such beautiful coloring and they last much longer than orchids. And, not long ago, I was going to a big splashy party to be a corsage wanton! So I bought four huge double poinsettias. With floral wire and a needle and thread, I sewed them all over a black evening jacket, so that one whole Rosalind Russell is another original gal whose doings make conversation pieces by the score. She doesn’t hesitate in her home to combine colors that sound atomic and turn out lovely. Take her living room—done in the single shock color of charmeuse with the shades varying a little. Sounds balling, doesn’t it? Well, its wonderful. Also her flowers match the pale green-yellow of the room. “I was trying to achieve a feeling of restfulness,” says Rosalind, “and I think I did. Also I achieved plenty for my guests to talk about!”

IT’S WELL worth while thinking of unusual touches for your home—plus giving your imagination some exercise, and providing conversation. I tried something in my bedroom that has Hollywood gabbling a mile a minute. I have a very gay bedroom with gingham skirts on the dressing table and milk-glass lamps. But when the room was finished I felt something was out of key—something seemed to be fighting the gaiety of the atmosphere. Then I saw what it was: The businesslike cord of the telephone on my bedside table! Quick as a flash came an idea: Why not wind a giddy string of artificial flowers on the cord so that every time I picked up the phone a garland of flowers would swing up with the receiver? That’s what I did—and the results are everything I wanted, both for the looks of my room and the gab of my guests!

And that’s almost the end of the Colby Class! Now that you’ve had a quick glance at some of Hollywood’s conversation pieces, I expect you to rush out pellmell and develop your own! It’s quite simple... just remember that whether it’s a new touch in clothes, jewelry or household decoration, make sure it represents you. For your conversation piece is not supposed to be a bizarre curiosity—it’s supposed to be part of your personality. You could try collecting something. Jennifer Jones collects fans—some to carry to dressy parties, others to trim mantels and bare walls. Opera star Gladys Swarthout has her downstairs powdery room papered with old opera programs.

Whatever you do, remember that you’re developing your own personality and your taste in living. Get a “gab piece” and get going! You’ll go far!

"This Time for Keeps"

In a way, this was a fairly accurate description of the Grayson-Johnnie Johnston nuptials when they occurred at Carmel by-the-sea, California, on August 22nd. In another way, Katie was pretty well confounded by Nature, which if it didn't "overdo" things, certainly outdid itself to make this a Technicolor production.

For one thing, you couldn't bring together so naturally handsome a pair as this bride and groom anywhere, and keep it a "plain" occasion. Straight, bright-haired Johnnie in his gray suit, white shirt emphasizing the brown of his face, and slim, blue-eyed Katie, with those fresh pink cheeks her groom is so proud of, wearing lace and orange blossoms, and a gray taffeta dress that stopped, ballet length, just short of her slender ankles.

Also, to defeat any wedding in its "plain and simple" determination, we give you a "technical adviser" as spectacularly lovely as Maureen O'Hara. It was Maureen, Kathryn's closest chum, who planned everything from the bride's orange wreath down to her slivery-gray sandals. Will Price, Maureen's husband, was to be best man-Maureen, matron of honor. But the tragic death of Will's brother, Kenneth Price, Jr., on August 20th, naturally necessitated a change of plan.

Last October, when Katie and Johnnie did a Philharmonic concert in Sacramento, they drove back to Los Angeles along the road which follows the ocean. It was then they decided they would some day be married in Carmel, where the beach curves like the golden rim of a saucer around the wide blue of the Pacific. They'd spend such honeymoon as movie stars can count on, on Pebble Beach, where agates can be picked up by the handful for free, and where the wind-flattened eucalyptus and pines stand in somber serey-like rows in sun and moonlight.

This lovely valley is famous for its Carmel Mission, erected in 1771 by Padre Junipero Serra. Sacred and changeless as time, its mossy old walls stand in the blue and gold glare of sun, sea and ocean. The imperturbability of yesterday, and the bright promise of today and tomorrow. Unconsciously significant on this wedding day of two young people who both had known previous unhappiness.

Radio-Star Johnnie and Katie first met on the M-G-M lot where they were both under contract. There was the immediate and common bond possessed by all those favored individuals who have the power of lifting themselves and their voices into a stratosphere of song where earth-bound voices can't follow. Too, there was the inner loneliness and confusion of a couple of kids who hadn't been quite able to work things out with mates they'd picked "when all of us were too young to know about those things."

Johnnie has two children by his first marriage—Julie, aged five and John Dennis, one-and-a-half years old. They visit Johnnie often. Kathryn has no children.

When Metro sent them both out on a personal appearance tour their friendship had ripened into love.

The tour was an extended one—"And we knew that any romance that could last through the irritations and tribulations of three-and-a-half months of touring must be true love!" says Johnnie.

For a year now, they have been gradually "fixing up" the home they will live in together. The house, one of the loveliest old English manors you've seen, was named John Grayson Johnston. That much is fairly well settled. The girl will be Mary Kathryn, with her mother (when and if she arrives) slightly mended to spell it "Merrie."
"Our very latest model. Built-in, roller-bearing case for Pepsi-Cola."

"I'm like Cohan. I think M-a-r-y is a grand old name," says the paternal side of the family.

Actually, he'll be satisfied if any feminine offspring they have manages to arrive with one-half as beautiful a complexion as his wife's always fresh-washed looking skin. "I think that school-girl look was what first attracted me to Katie."

Between eating, golfing, and furnishing, Katie and Johnnie like to play double solitaire. They don't care a lot for big parties, but prefer to spend a chummy evening with a small group — the group being almost certain to contain Maureen and husband Will Price. The O'Hara and the Grayson were once neighbors, and they've remained very close girl friends.

"I love that Irish warmth about her," says Kathryn, "and I get such a kick out of those superstitions of hers. She even believes in banshees!"

More than any of their other diversions, of course, Mr. and Mrs. Johnston like to sing together. "We just sit down and try to drown each other out," says Kathryn. This is one case in which it's hard on the neighbors — living out of ear-range. As consolation, however, there's the fact that Kathryn will soon be heard in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's "The Kissing Bandit," with Frank Sinatra as co-star. Johnnie whose picture career is beginning to boom to the same heights as his already established radio status, will hit the screen soon for Eagle-Lion as "The Man From Texas."

Completed and ready for showing, too, is his recent screen job in "This Time For Keeps"— which strikes us as a happy title for these two real-life lovers.

"We haven't any rules for our marriage," says Kathryn seriously. "My one belief is, if a husband and wife will remember to 'live and let live,' they have a big chance for happiness."

Remembering those hushed, happy moments in the lovely inn at Carmel-by-the-Sea, we just repeat the title from the picture of the same name: "This Time For Keeps!"

Sheridan Preferred

At the time her feelings were lacerated by the cigars passing her by as she was tugging at her corsets. In basque waist and hoop skirt she was attired for General Grant's reception. She said she couldn't breathe. The corsets interfered with chest expansion of which she has considerable, due to playing football no doubt. "Tomorrow I'll make you wear these, Flynn," she said.

Mr. Flynn demurred. He modestly said he had not the wherewithal to put in them. "I'll find a couple of things," said Annie.

Mr. Flynn was called into the scene and put down his cigar to join General Grant. It was his business to be overwhelmed on sight of Miss Sheridan as she entered a moment later, a queenly vision. And indeed he was overwhelmed, as was General Grant and guest. The vision made her majestic entrance with Mr. Flynn's cigar atti in the queenly face.

This "take" will not reach the screen, which seems too bad because it got an ovation from director Raoul Walsh and crew.

Working with Annie is like having old happy days here again, says old-timer director Walsh who knows the business. She makes work play, as it should be, and sparks the spontaneity in everyone.

Half Annie's time is spent in comedy performances for her colleagues. They reciprocate. She observed that her wire hustle looked like a bird cage. Next morning two young parrots were in it.

"Don't think I won't wear them!" cried Annie.

This is another "take" the public will be denied. The things those parrots said behind Annie's back, though flattering to same, were not according to the direction code. The impudent birds must have majored in English at sailors' boot camp.

Miss Sheridan does not confine her efforts to her own set. She's all over the lot. Humphrey Bogart toiled through the last scene of a hard day when his director said: "Just one more take; it will be the last."

"I hope," said Mr. Bogart wearily.

It was a street of dives. Bogart was tailed by a hag making indecent proposals. In the final take when he turned to rebuff her he was rocked back by a bit of business he wasn't prepared for. The wench lifted her skirt to reveal a superlative leg artistically painted with a butterfly, a pet and "Annie."

"Sheridan, you wench!" whooped Bogart.

Annie had galloped over from her own stage to put on the make-up and substitute for the bit player, all as a gag to refresh old chum Bogie.

The core of Annie's philosophy, like Voltaire's, is laughter. "I live for laughs," says she. The creed: Have fun and get fat.

This is not as simple as it sounds else the world would not be colorful and Annie overweight.

Dazzling as ever in "Nora Prentiss" she was fourteen pounds less than before going AWOL. Male customers let out cries of pain. What they want is more Annie, not less. We can take shortages in many things but not in Sheridan.

Annie was not deliberately selling us short; she was up to no fool diet. The fourteen pounds were war casualty. She lost them on the Burma front to which Uncle Sam, knowing his business, sent her to corrupt morale.

Though never feeling better in her virile life, Annie started drinking a glass of beer with a sandwich before going to bed. Then she tried ginger ale mixed with your daughter's marriage?

Be sure she learns the REAL SCIENTIFIC TRUTH about these INTIMATE PHYSICAL FACTS!

No loving mother would think of letting her daughter enter marriage without first telling her how important douching two or three times a week often is to intimate feminine cleanliness, health, charm and marriage happiness — how important douching is to combat one of woman's most serious decorative problems.

Often a young girl knows only "half-the-truth" or misinformation whispered among her girl friends.

So mothers should make sure the advice they pass on to their daughters is as modern, scientific and trustworthy as it can be. And it will be if she tells her daughter to put Zonite in the douche. Because no other type liquid antiseptic-germicide for the douche of all those tested is so powerful yet so safe to delicate tissues.

Truly A Miracle —
Wise well-informed women no longer use weak, dangerous or old-fashioned 'kitchen' mixtures for the douche.

The Zonite principle, developed by a world-famous Surgeon and Chemist, is truly a miracle! The first antiseptic-germicide principle in the world that was so powerful yet positively non-poisonous, non-irritating, and non-burning. Women can use Zonite as directed as often as necessary without risk of injury.

What Zonite Does:
Zonite actually destroys and removes odor-causing, clinging waste substances. Helps guard against infection. It's so powerfully effective no germs of any kind tested have ever been found that Zonite will not immediately kill on contact. You know it's not always possible to contact all the germs in the tract. But with Zonite, you can be sure it kills every reachable germ and keeps them from multiplying.

Complete directions on douching come with every bottle.

cream. During “The Unfaithful,” Zachary Scott stoked her with eggnogs which she despises. He kept adding eggs until all the bobby-sox pullets in San Fernando Valley were cackling “Annie” and laying their best, while back in Massachusetts an old hen fan laid a four-and-a-half pounder.

“Men,” says Annie, speaking on a subject she’s in position to speak on, “men like women fat; cushioned well, anyhow.” She thinks diet vicious because it tends to make gals irritable and witchy. Annie herself eats with vim, not much at a time but often, staple fodder such as meat and potatoes and pancakes rolled with jelly.

Hollywood is responsible for the slenderizing madness.

“It began with the assumption that the camera adds five pounds to your appearance,” says Annie, “I think that a myth. But what if it does?”

Annie couldn’t be too voluptuous to please the Sultans.

Annie’s best chum is Steve Hannagan, publicity tycoon, and to his Irish influence much of her gait might be ascribed were it not for the fact that Annie herself has Irish blood and does not credit it for humor.

“All Irish are not funny. That’s another myth,” says Annie the myth-smasher. Her second husband, George Brent, was Irish and evidently not funny because Annie divorced him. Her first husband, Eddie Norris, “Oh, he was a mixture of Welsh and something.”

Annie thinks it’s the Indian in her; she has a Cherokee ancestor.

“Squaws don’t laugh,” someone said.

“Don’t you believe that,” said squaw Sheridan. “They laugh behind the white squaws’ backs.”

Will Rogers, like Annie, boasted Cherokee blood. The world never knew how funny Will was until Sam Goldwyn had him tailed by a stenographer who set down his spontaneous drollery. That was in days of silent pictures and Goldwyn put Will’s wit on the screen as subtitles.

Some scenario should kill Annie. She’s a natural for comedy. Enchantresses of history, stage and screen have been ladies loving laughter and capable of provoking it in men. Annie suggests that “Red-Headed Woman” Jean Harlow did, and roles such as Carole Lombard made classic.

Annie bolted the screen after making some fifty pictures in twelve years because she wanted to find better stories. She didn’t object to a little more money either; she doesn’t want the responsibility of her own production unit but, “I could do with a little percentage.”

Sheridan has worked like a Trojan from the day she arrived, a beauty contest winner in a carload of thirty in 1933. She’s the only one of that cargo on the screen today.

Her manner of life is simple. Her friends are mostly workers she has known from way back; few are on the star lists. Her constant friend is probably Martha Giddings, who also acts as wardrobe woman on her films. A Swedish couple, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Bewick, have been her homekeepers for years.

Annie lives in a small farmhouse on three acres in Encino in San Fernando Valley. The population of the estate includes, beside Annie and the Bewicks, Clara Lou the slap-happy cow, Amos and Andy theoodles, Rex the horse.

The favorite room, in consonance with Annie’s philosophy, is the playroom. It is also music room and trophy room, prettily adorned with embalmed bull’s ears and tails which were dedicated to Annie by the toreros in the arena in Mexico City. Chiquelín, famous matador, also tossed her the capote he wore in the promenade, and

by VALDA SHERMAN

Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm — There is nothing “wrong” with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome — Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger — perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to greatly gush perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike — Don’t take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid’s exclusive formula. That’s why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses — more men and women everywhere — use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself — You’ll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approved Seal — harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don’t be half-safe — During this “age of courtship,” don’t let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don’t be half-safe — be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 94¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

What Should I Do?

Both of you need to become mental adults, to recognize that marriage is a partnership and that it doesn’t matter who contributes what share to the union as long as both of you are planning together, working together, and “having fun” together.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
In 1943 I met an Army Captain and fell in love with him at first sight. I saw him only once, but he asked me to write while he was overseas and sent me his address when he was shipped out. For two years we corresponded regularly.

Those letters were the most wonderful things in all the world. You can imagine my surprise when one of my last letters was returned to me, marked “Returned to U.S.A.”

A few weeks later his mother (with whom I had corresponded although I’d never met her) wrote, saying that he had come home on leave, but had been sent out again on a secret mission, so would be unable to write.

Eventually I met another soldier at my sister’s home, and after his discharge we saw each other often and he admitted he was in love with me. So, we were married, and he has proved to be a wonderful husband.

However, I am still in love with the Captain.

Do you think I should write to his mother and ask her how to get in touch with him? I can’t want my husband, but I feel I may have missed my destiny if I don’t hear from the Captain and perhaps see him just once again.

Helen L.

The important thing to realize is that you aren’t in love with the “Caption” of your dreams at all. You are in love with Love. You have built up an ideal husband—handsome, debonair, so gallant and so courtly that no mere human being could ever half fulfill it.

If you were to meet the Captain, preferably with a head cold, all your false illusions would vanish with the first sneeze.

You have admitted that your husband loves you and has proved to be an ideal partner.

If you only knew how much marital unhappiness there is in this world you would get down on your knees and thank heaven for such a husband—and turn your romantic love to him alone.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I was married at the age of fifteen, and had my first child ten months later, a little girl. A year later we had our second child, a boy, but by that time my husband and I were having so much trouble that we decided to separate. One of the difficulties between us was a boy I had known all my life. Wherever we went, I saw this boy.

I was never in love with him, yet I planned to marry him—after my divorce — had he not died of pneumonia. In excusing myself for something that is totally inexcusable, I might say that I felt sorry for this boy and afterwards my husband and I had separated, I was wretched and miserable, and lost sight of values. At any rate, the point of this is that my third child, another boy, was born just before my divorce decree became final. His birth certificate bears the same surname as that of the other two children.

“I had everything most women want... a husband I loved, two handsome children, a pretty home... but I let it slip through my fingers. Now that Tom is gone, I realize just how foolish I’ve been. But what good can that do... unless you can learn from my mistake.” And you can profit from Tina Carlin’s mistake. Read her startling revelation in the new October TRUE STORY. It’s called

However, there was a good deal of talk in town at the time.

This boy is now ten. Not long ago, a "friend" of mine told my daughter that her younger brother was not a full brother, but only a half-brother.

I am now married to the finest man on earth. When he asked me to marry him seven years ago, I told him my entire story and he said, "Not your past, but your future with me is my concern." I asked him if we should tell our youngest boy the truth and he said, "Not until he is old enough and has seen enough of life to understand."

Should I tell this ten-year-old boy, whom I love desperately and whose love I want to keep, the truth?

Mrs. Dennis I.

(Because this problem presented difficulties beyond my depth, I felt, I have asked Dr. Paul Popeneo, renowned domestic relations counselor to supply his judgment in the matter—CC)

Tell him now. The longer you wait, the harder it will be—for you and for him alike.

Remember, he is going to find out, sooner or later. Other people know it and are already talking about it. You can't insulate your son.

There are people in the world who are mean enough, ornery enough, to take delight in giving him the information in the most harmful possible way. Somehow they feel unconsciously they will themselves be just a little bit happier if they can make him miserable—not because they have anything against him, but merely because when someone, anyone, else is miserable they can rejoice. "I'm better off than he is, anyhow."

Your husband wants the boy to be old enough to understand. In one sense, he will never be old enough to understand. No one could understand fully, without going through the whole experience that you went through. But if you face the situation immediately, you will be doing all you can to protect him. He deserves it.

Paul Popeneo

Dear Miss Colbert:

My husband left two years ago, not because he didn't love me, but because he couldn't settle down.

During the time he was gone, I took my two children and moved in with my single sister, but her apartment was larger than my place and the children's school was nearby. My sister has never been well, and a few months ago her doctor told me that her ailment is incurable. Watching her die slowly, and not being able to do anything for her is getting on my nerves.

Naturally I have been working while my husband has been away. Recently, I met Nat quite by accident and discovered that he is a new man, settled down to one job. I love him more than ever, and he loves me, too. We would like to start all over again, but I can't very well leave my sister. She refuses to go to a hospital because she doesn't think she is sick enough.

I know that if my sister came to live with us, Nat's old restlessness would begin again. He can't endure being near a sick person.

Please help me. I've thought about it so much that I can't make my own decision.

Mrs. N. P. R.

Throughout your letter there is a wordless plea for me to tell you what your own conscience refuses to advise you: To tell your sister the truth about her condition, place her in a hospital, and return to your husband.

Mrs. Dennis I.
I wish I could. But there is something more important in this world, I believe, than keeping a marriage together: That is preserving human dignity.

When you were in need, your sister took you in. Now you must stand by her as long as she needs you.

This hard fact may be a blessing in disguise.

Deep in your heart, you don't trust your husband to be equal to the emergency of illness. If he can't endure being near a sick person, what would happen to your family if you fell ill—with two children for whom you are responsible—and he deserted you again?

Don't you think a courting period, during which you stand by your sister, and your husband proves his good intentions by helping you in every way possible, would be a good thing? I do.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My son is a lieutenant in the Air Corps. Last spring he married a girl eighteen; he is twenty-one.

Three months after his wedding he was shipped overseas, and his wife came to live with me. At Christmas time she went to visit her relatives in a southern state for a month. When she came back I discovered that she had met a fellow and had dated him while she was visiting, and that she wrote to him several times, also sent him her picture for which he thanked her.

My close friends want me to tell my son about his wife, but he is a very jealous boy and might do something desperate as he worships her. He sends her money, has bought her lots of nice clothes, a beautiful set of rings and a five-hundred-dollar fur coat.

When she goes out at night with her girl friends, she removes her rings.

She doesn't know that the family knows all of this.

Now my son has sent for her to join him overseas, and she is planning to make the trip. I want him to be happy and I don't like to be a meddlesome in-law, but my friends say I should tip him off before there are children involved.

I will be glad to follow your advice.

A worried mother.

The important issue—as you realize and have implied in your letter—is the happiness of your son.

But we are in a letter that would obviously bring great unhappiness to someone you love, you should ask yourself what really would be accomplished by such a step.

Since your daughter-in-law is joining your son, she would be with him when the letter arrived. I think I am safe in predicting that such a letter would cause her to hate you for the rest of her days. Nor do I think your son would thank you. Naturally, the girl would deny every bit of your story, and your son—who adores her—would believe her and regard you as a trouble-making and a jealous woman.

Now that these young people are going to be together again, why not hold fast to the belief that they will be able to build a fine marriage? Perhaps your son has also made mistakes during his wife's absence.

One more thing: Don't you think that keeping family troubles to yourself, instead of sharing them with neighbors, would simplify family adjustments in the future? Talking over a thing as serious as this with people in your home town, might jeopardize your son's happiness in the future.

Dear Miss Colbert:

My husband and I have been married a little over two years and have a year-old baby boy. A few weeks ago we went to a night club to celebrate our second anniversary. I returned to our table after freshening up and found my husband kissing another woman.

When I asked him about it afterward, my husband said he had a mild “crush” on her. This hurt me and it preys on my mind night and day. I’ve lost my appetite, and my nights are sleepless. My husband has now told me that this woman doesn’t mean a thing to him, but I no longer feel safe.

How would you suggest I get over this? I have no parents, so I have no place to go, and both of us are twenty-four years old, which is late in life to try to start all over again.

Vanita B.

Unless you revise your attitude about this minor happening, you will ruin your marriage and perhaps your life.

You should forget this incident and never mention it again. Certainly no sensible woman would consider dissolving a marriage because of one impetuous, meaningless kiss exchanged in the midst of a night club during an anniversary celebration.

A kiss is not that important. When you were in high school you probably kissed a dozen boys good night after dancing parties and neither of you thought much about it later. In motion pictures every actress and actor plays love scenes which are strictly business and in no way alter the artist’s devotion to the one he or she loves.

You are right in growing weary of your own self-pity, for such indulgence gets a person nowhere, and is a violation of the most important principles of personal development.

Turning your attention outward for a change, you will soon notice that everyone on earth is bound by a borderline of some sort. Right in your own school there are boys and girls who are no different from members of sororities and fraternities, yet they are excluded. In every society there are divisions and subdivisions.

By all means you should plan to attend university for the full four years, educating yourself as extensively as possible. Don't forget this: The more intelligent people are (or the more highly educated) the more readily they see one of the great truths of life: That the earth thrives on difference.

Your letter was so intelligent that I feel you will find rare success in life if you cast aside self-pity. Continue your education and devote yourself to finding others of all nationalities who, like yourself, want to make a contribution to the further civilizing of humankind.

There are two excellent books which you, and almost everyone, should read: "What Life Should Mean To You" by Dr. Alfred Adler, and "Peace of Mind," by Joshua Loth Liebman.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

Last term I had an urge to take things around high school that weren't mine. I kept telling myself that it was just "swiping"—until one of the girls caught me and told me to my face that I was a thief. The word was so horrible that it made me sick. I've never taken another thing. I guess the reason I did it in the first place was that my father and I make a home together and we don't have very much. My mother died when I was eleven and things have been very tough for us ever since.

This girl who caught me didn't report me to the faculty, but she did tell some of my best girl friends so that now they won't have anything to do with me.

How can I explain to them that I didn't realize what a dreadful thing I was doing, and how can I win them back?

Celia W.

First of all you should be grateful to
The next thing for you to do is to realize that everyone in the world has made at least one serious mistake in his or her lifetime. To make a mistake is human. Once that mistake is corrected, it should be forgotten and allowed to slip into the past.

Having started on the right road, you will have no trouble in keeping your old friends and making new friends. With your old friends, I feel it would be best for you to explain to them, as you have to me, why you did what you did, and that you are not going to do it again. Ask them if they will continue to be friendly with you since you have realized your mistake.

Finally, may I say that I admire you for having done a fine about-face in the mistaken pattern? You have shown real character, and character always wins.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

As soon as my boy friend (now my husband) returned from overseas, he re-enlisted in the regular army. He intends making the army a permanent career.

I don't say that army life isn't promising, but it is making my husband a lazy loafer. He puts in a few hours work in the morning, after which he is free to play golf, lie around the house and sleep, or otherwise waste time.

My greatest complaint is his disinterest in getting better quarters for us. We have been living in a room at the home of my relatives for over two years. He seems perfectly content to let this situation go on indefinitely.

When I complained, he made arrangements for us to share a house with another army couple, which I refused to do on the ground that no roof is wide enough to shelter two families.

His buddies are a major factor in his life. He works with them, shares recreation hours with them, and then expects me to spend most of my evenings with them and their families. If I refuse to accompany him, he goes without me. It isn't that I mind his having lots of friends, but he won't go with me to visit my friends—none of whom are army people.

Can you tell me how I can get my husband to show some ambition, make a real home for me, and consider my choice of friends as important as his?

Sally W.

Because your husband doesn't exert himself beyond the bonds required by his army job, you mustn't feel he isn't contributing his share of work to the world. I don't think there are many human beings in the world who, if given a steady job which paid them a living wage for four hours of labor, would insist upon doing eight, ten or twelve for the mere love of it.

You sound like an energetic human being who is inclined to be critical of anyone who lacks your drive.

If you want better living quarters, spend each morning while your husband is soldiering—trying to find something to your taste. Then you can take off the afternoons to relax with him.

As far as the matter of friends, I suspect that your husband is easy around your civilian acquaintances. The army is run on a totally different basis from civilian industry, so your husband may feel lost and unimportant in any discussion of

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a physically handicapped young lady in my early twenties, who is a "shut-in" as a result. It has occurred to me that there are a lot of young men and women who are in the same condition, yet who long to make new friends and to learn something of the great outside world.

I would like to organize a correspondence club so these people could communicate with each other, but I am not sure just how to go about it. I am not doing this for profit—I want to spread a little sunlight.

Do you think such a club could be organized in spite of the opinion of some of my friends that the whole idea is idealistic but impractical?

(Miss) Thomasine Thomas Route No. 1 Marysville, Washington

Your idea seems to me to be an excellent one.

From my PHOTOPLAY correspondence I know that there are many shut-ins who are eager for this sort of friendship. For this reason I am breaking my hard-and-fast rule of not publishing real names and addresses.

In answering each of the letters yourself, I think you should forward letters from people in, say, Maine, to those in Arizona. In short, introduce people in one part of the country to those at some distance so that each person will have something about the things he knows best—will have a fascinated audience in the other.

Let me know how this works out.

Claudette Colbert

Have you a problem which seems to have no solution? Would you like the thoughtful advice of

Claudette Colbert?

If you would, write to her in care of Photoplay, 321 S. Beverly Drive, Beverly Hills, California, and if Miss Colbert feels that your problem is of general interest, she'll consider answering it here. Names and addresses will be held confidential for your protection.

I Can't Forget

(Continued from page 53) Hollywood was there—my then dream boy, Gary Cooper (p.s. He still is!), Cary Grant, Fred Astaire, Merle Oberon, Claudette Colbert. And Ronald Colman. And I remember this party more because of Ronnie than because of all the wonderful jewels and gowns and all the other stars. It was the beginning of Colman's courtship of Benita Hume! He met her here for the first time. He took her home and bit this thing as they were going steady and getting married.

Van Johnson's smile—filling the whole screen in "Of Human Bondage." I don't know if Van had made any pictures before that—he probably had. But this was the first time he registered with me. I'll always remember Van as the soldier, smiling in the train as he went off to war and death.

My first lunch—of a person, Welles. I hated him! He wasn't married at the time. And consciously or subconsciously I always try to be very charming to bachelors. (I wasn't married myself then!) But it was like hitting a rock with a small stone. Orson never stopped talking, even to let me ask a question. He was just busy talking like a genius. Time and Hollywood had tempered Mr. Welles. Now he's the one who tries to charm. I like it better this way! ...

MY FIGHT with Constance Bennett—I still feel the pain when I think of it. Connie was making her last "Topper" picture. And I'd heard that she was difficult and when her producer wanted to introduce us, I said, "Well, perhaps not." He thought it was stupid and went forward. And made the introduction. There was a ghastly silence for ten seconds. Then Connie, in her loudest, and sweetestvoice—there were about two hundred men, women, and children who accused me the biggest so and so in Hollywood! At such moments my brain is usually paralyzed. But heaven granted me one moment of clarity—to hiss rather than swallow. "Not the biggest Connie, the second biggest!"

Errol Flynn—Ts was a party with Errol, just after he separated from Lilli Damita and I believe he thought that he would remarry within five years. Errol was so sure he wouldn't marry ever again, I could have made the bet for a thousand dollars. And the reason the incident stays in my Hollywood memories—Errol didn't pay off! ...

Judy Garland at sixteen—plump and starry-eyed, inviting me to have tea with her for a reading of her poems! Judy at twenty-five—too vivacious, too nervous, head-aches, sleepless nights. ...

Ever since I can remember in Hollywood, Frank Sinatra has been breaking dates with me. He always has a legitimate excuse. The first, second, and third times, it was urgent business. The fourth time it was a bad cold. And he usually sends me red roses as an apology. That's all right with me, but Franklin Delano Roosevelt sent me a pair. And he gave it back to me—so help me well, I guess I'll love you just the same.

One of my more memorable moments in Hollywood was seeing Paulette Goddard after she was supposed to have broken up with me at Ciro's with a well-known director. All the women's clubs of America seemed to know about it and were threatening to boycott her movies. It was embarrassing, but I enjoyed Paul and F.D.'s. And she gave it back to me and straight from the shoulder, ending with, "You know how ambitious I am. Would I jeopardize everything I've worked for, for one moment of silliness? I believed her.

And I also know how it feels to be a star—I was "paired" with Gary Cooper when we went to Texas for the premiere of The Westerner. The plane trip was very bumpy and I was very ill—until Gary lifted me out of my berth and carried me to the car! Boy, oh boy, oh boy . . .!

I'll never forget my one and only movie role in Hollywood with Kay Kyser in "That's Right, You're Wrong." I was playing myself, and I had one line to say, "How do you Mr. Kyser," but I was determined to do it right. I got up at five in the morning for make-up and hair-do at the studio. I think I even lost a few pounds so as to look good on the screen. Then came the big moment. I opened my mouth to say the line. At that point Hedda Hopper stood right in front of me! Well, they saw the brim of my hat anyway—and I do mean, My hat . . .!

Hearing someone at David Selznick's studio say about Ingrid Bergman, "She'll never be a star in Hollywood, you can't photograph her face!" . . . Watching Peggy Cummins "take it," when she was fired from "Forever Amber." . . . Lucille Ball calling me from New York and bawling me out for thirty minutes without a break, for something I had aired about her. . . . The nice letter from Robert Taylor, thanking me for something I'd written. Very few do, you know. . . . The impact of James Mason in "Odd Man Out". . . . Cornell Wilde, terribly unhappy, working with Sonja Henie in "Winter Time" . . . Dorothy Lamour, after her divorce from Herbie Kay, crying and saying, "Will I ever get married again?" . . . Mary Astor's dignity during the front page—"Diary Case." . . . Ray Milland's kindness when I burst into tears for no reason when I was interviewing him, too soon after the birth of my son. . . .

ADVENTURE: The—Eagle-Lion: This Adventure is Dean Jagger whom you'll see soon with Clark Gable. In this thriller, she gives you shivers plus laughs as the little Irish rebel who's just determined to get mixed up in some spy business. Trevor Howard helps her along. (July)

BLAZE OF NOON— Paramount: Four big popular guys, Bill Holden, Bill Bendix, Sonny Tufts and Sterling Hayden, all in back suits in the days when the pilots used to like frightening chickens. Anne Baxter's the girl who gets mixed up in their high-tension lives. Good people; good film. (July)

BOB, SON OF BATTLE—20th Century-Fox: A loved children's classic gives Lou McCullister and Peter Allen a chance to try out their Scotch accents. Everybody in the family can go along to watch the hogs' dogs being worked and Edmund Gwenn as a fine Scot in a film that's a little too drawn out to deliver any special goods. (Sept.)

CHRISTMAS EVE—Bogues-U.S.: Why was this ever produced? It has confused plot after plot after lady Ann Harding who gathers her adopted sons George Pratt, George Brent and Randolph Scott about her at Christmas Eve. When the truth is known, the audience comes to see what they've been doing is so incredible you may walk right out. (July)

COPACABANA— Cool-U.S.A.: If you're entertained by Groucho Marx and Carmen Miranda, you may enjoy this picture set against New York's famous night club. There's a glimpse of some "Copa Girls," of night-life figures Louis Soloh, Abe Green and Earl Wilson and a "grown-up" Gloria Jean. (July)

CYNTHIA—MGM: Elizabeth Taylor is Cynthia in a family story that starts off slow but ends up with everyone having a fine time in a pleasant atmosphere. James Lydon is A-1; Scotty Beckett gets a big laugh rating. There's George Murphy and Mary Astor, too, along with veterans S. Z. Sakall, Gene Lockhart and Spring Byington. (Aug.)

DEAR RUTH— Paramount: A picture to lift your spirits is this comedy about little Mona Fleming who writes letters to soldier William Holden, using stories Joan Crawford has told friends. Edward Arnold and Billy De Wolfe take part in this fast and funny Hollywood version of the Broadway hit. (Aug.)

DEEP VALLEY— Warners: On-the-dressy-side film about a broken-down family with Ida Lupino in between. Fredric March and Henry Hull, and Wayne Morris being unexpectedly good and honest. Convict Dane Clark snaps Ida out of her depression. Then comes the good sales. Weak at the knees. (Sept.)

Burt Lancaster is miscast, as is Mary Astor; Lisabeth Scott and John Hodiak make an unconvincing romantic team. Big fights at but there's no way the desert to degenerate into a laughing stock. (Aug.)

DISHONORED LADY—Chortel-Strumberg-UA: Nothing real about this whole business except Hedy Lamarr beauty. She manages to look imperious even when she's a neurotic. John Loder tries to be a wolf and poor Dennis O'Keefe just doesn't know what to do with the whole thing. (July)

DOWN TO EARTH—Columbia: Rita Hayworth comes down to earth as the Muse Terpsichora to play the lead in Larry Parks' "Big Parade." She sticks out a mercenary's hand in the pie and almost spoils everything with her glitzy "Dancing with the Stars." Lots of songs and dances in Technicolor. (July)

EGG AND I, THE—Universal: The rough and ruminating best seller had everyone laughing but the film turned into a card game. Evelyn McHale Murray and Claudette Colbert looking chic in a chic setting. There's a blonde millionaire down the road and one of the Keats sons! Marjorie Main helps some but not enough. (July)

FIESTA—M-G-M: Lively Technicolor happenings down in Mexico including gay bullfights and symphonic symphonies, centering around Esther Williams and her twin brother newsmonger Ricardo Montalban. There's Mary Astor, Fortunio Bonanova and Akim Tamiroff to help carry off this successful little summer starrer. (Sept.)

GHOST AND MRS. MUH, THE—20th Century-Fox: A black and white film and directing piece about ghost Dick Harrison who doesn't like the idea of Mrs. Gene Tierney Muh coming to live in his former home. He's quite a character! George Sanders gets delightfully foolish, Edna Best and Vanessa Brown as well, with the height comedy takes over. (May)

GHOST GOES WILD, THE—Republic: Everybody else goes wild in this too. James Ellison and his butler Edward Everett Horton walk around in sheets for laughs. "I just know I'll never have a decent life," says Donnelly isn't scared; you won't be either. (July)

GREAT EXPECTATIONS—Universal-International: You won't be disappointed for a single minute in the English film adaptation of Dickens novel. A "young man of great expectations" falls heir to a large sum of money but is never really sure he's it. The British plot is good enough to give you shivers if you're a mystery-lover. (July)

HEAVEN ONLY KNOWS—Nebenzel-UA: Bob Cummings sprouts some invisible wings and comes down to earth as the Archangel Michael to straighten out the lives of bad and good people. Write the wings this is just another Western with Virgil Curtiss looking exactly out of place in his calico shirt. (Sept.)

HIT PARADE OF 1947—Republic: Headliners of the entertainment world; Joan Edwards, Eddie Albert, Constance Moore and Gil Lamb turn in another musical about show business that's not hard to take. Woody Herman and his orchestra swing in; Roy Rogers has a guest spot. (Aug.)

HOMESTEAD OF PARADISE VALLEY—Republic; Allan Lane as Red Ryder has to clean up a lot of trouble in a Western with the help of Lyle Hayne and Alan Todd. (July)

HOMESTRETCH, THE—20th Century-Fox: Cornel Wilde is called upon to act as a hare-brained waster in a film about horses and race tracks. The exciting, the romantic, the humorous all come together in this film. (July)

HONEYMOON—RKO: An attempt at some fun with Babbie and Temple trying to catch up with Weezy Madison in Mexico City to marry him, and Francot Tone trying to catch up with her zany dancing. It has colorful shots of flowers and crespes but the comedy doesn't quite come off. (July)

HUCKSTERS, THE—M-G-M: Quick and to the nautical point is this remake of the best-seller with William Holden as the "Huckster" and English Deborah Kerr the lady who can resist a sales pitch. With "The Perfect Gentleman," Menjou helps glad the laughs and the whole business will sell you to with ease. (Sept.)

I WONDER WHO'S KISSING HER NOW—20th Century-Fox: "Ivy," despite Joan Fontaine's daffy manipulations, doesn't give you as much as you'd expect from her. A lady who's bent on getting somewhere by using men and is a murderess...

WIN OF HAROLD DIDDLEBOCK — Califor-bia-USA: Harold Fordyce has made a silly picture about the story of Harold Diddlebock who is no doubt the best actress of the year. (Judy)

SPOLIERS OF THE NORTH — Republic: The troubled in this one about salmon-fishing in Alaska. Paul Kelly’s crooked operator, James A.
Boyle, is his good and honest partner who wins in the end. Evelyn Ankers is a cool and calm piece, but everyone’s talents are wasted. (Aug.)

THEY WON’T BELIEVE ME — RKO: You can sit with the jury while the accused, Roger Young, tells of his treatment of his wife Rita Johnson, their coming with bad girl Susan Hayward and philandering with Jane Greer. After you’ve been interested in his story, you can decide the verdict. (Aug.)

TROUBLE WITH WOMEN — Paramount:
Evelyn Wright and Ray Milland lend their talents to a film that’s just a time passer. It has to do with a psychology professor who thinks women should be pushed into the job with a girl reporter who pushes him around instead. Brian Donlevy helps things. (Jul)

UNFAITHFUL, THE — Warners: Hard-bitting and suspensetful, this is Ann Sheridan doing a good job as the week-old bride whose husband Zachary Scott goes overseas for three weeks. Unfaithfulness leads to a murder charge with Lew Ayres as the lawyer. Thoughtful movie-goers will like it. (Aug.)

VARIETY GIRL — Paramount: The history of the Variety Club, “heart of show business,” is the novel idea behind this. Everyone in Paramount makes a bow at some time or other, with Crosby and Hope leading the parade. Mary Hatcher and Olin San Jean center the theme adequately; it’s a real Variety Show that’s a different kind of fun. (Sept.)

WEB, THE — Universal-International: A fast moving film with fast dialogue bantered by lawyer Edmond O’Brien, saucer crookster Vincent Price, smart secretary Ella Raines and that sure fire character Bill Bixby. It’s the old frame-up with lots of novel twists; go right on into that “Web.” (Sept.)

WINTER WONDERLAND — Republic: There’s a ski ballet starring Lynn Roberts and Charles Drake, a daring rescue from a cavern and some fancy skel-ting in the innocuous tale about life in a winter resort.
If you’re a winter-sports enthusiast, you may mildly enjoy the mild possibility. (Aug.)

WOMAN ON THE BEACH — RKO: Joan
 Bennett stinks along a deserted beach with Robert Ryan who has a bad case of nerves. They’re made worse when she meets Joan’s blind husband Charles Bickford and gets mixed up in their morbid love. (July)

WYOMING — Republic: Big rancher Bill Elliott fights the Homestead Act, but daughter Vera Ralston and John Carroll think the law’s right. This runs along incomplicating scenery and leadless
 Western with Albert Dekker, Mine. Ouspenskaya. (Aug.)

YANKEE FAIR — Republic: You see only the back of the villain’s head until the end of the picture, but you know all about him, from Joan Woodbury’s father. Too bad traveling pitcher Doug Fowley couldn’t have gussed too. (July)

WORLD'S FAVORITE EYE MAKE-UP
"Experience is the best teacher...

in playing table tennis or choosing a cigarette," says Mary Reilly

INTERNATIONAL TABLE-TENNIS STAR

I SMOKED MANY DIFFERENT BRANDS DURING THE WARTIME SHORTAGE. CAMELS SUIT ME BEST!

More people are smoking Camels than ever before

- Experience? Yes, that wartime cigarette shortage was a revealing experience to smokers everywhere.

   You smoked one brand one day... a different brand the next... whatever was available. Naturally, you compared brands. That's how millions learned the meaning of the phrase, "Camels suit me to a 'T'!"

   And, now that you can get any brand of cigarettes you ask for, more people are smoking Camels than ever before. Try Camels yourself. And, when you smoke them, remember this fact: Only choice tobaccos, properly aged, and blended in the time-honored Camel way, are used in Camels.

Your "T-ZONE" will tell you...

T FOR TASTE... T FOR THROAT...

that's your proving ground for any cigarette. See if Camels don't suit your "T-Zone" to a "T."

According to a recent Nationwide survey:

MORE DOCTORS SMOKE CAMELS than any other cigarette

- Three nationally known independent research organizations asked 113,397 doctors to name the cigarette they smoked. More doctors named Camel than any other brand.
Ever see a dewy-fresh, fragrant bed of mint like this? Probably not — because this is special mint, with the sparkling clean, cool flavor you can only find in Clark's Tendermint gum! Clark's fine row-mint is gathered at the peak of early-morning freshness, when nature seals in its true mint-essence. Ask for freshly minted Clark's Tendermint—naturally, it's better!
GIRL: And that, my half-pint pest, is about as close as I get to any man anywhere.

CUPID: Maybe you should make like those stars, Sugar. They're practically cuddling your moon-man. But, of course, they sparkle.

GIRL: I get it. All but one teeny-weeny point—just how do I put sparkle in this 5-watt smile of mine, Mr. Smarty-Pantless?

CUPID: I tell you, glum one. But first... see any "pink" on your tooth brush these days?

GIRL: Uh-huh, and blue skies and red sails in the sunset and... what's my tooth brush's color scheme got to do with my smile?

CUPID: Only just about everything, Miss Ignorance of 1947. That "pink" is a sign to see your dentist. Quick. Let him decide what's the matter. May be simply a case of today's soft foods robbing your gums of exercise. If so, he may suggest "the helpful stimulation of Ipana and massage."

GIRL: Smile... remember, urchin?... it was my smile we were yapity-yappiting about. Where'd it go?

CUPID: This way: A sparkling smile depends largely on healthy gums. So-o-o, if your dentist advises massage—that's for you. 9 out of 10 dentists do recommend gum massage... regularly or in special cases, according to a recent nationwide survey. And this same survey shows they prefer Ipana Tooth Paste 2 to 1 for their own personal use.

HOW TO MASSAGE YOUR GUMS. Gently massage at the gum line, always keeping fingertip in contact with the tooth surface. It's at the gum line, where teeth and gums meet, that so many troubles start—where gentle massage can be so helpful.

Between regular visits to your dentist, help him guard your smile of beauty.

For your Smile of Beauty
This month we're roaring about one of the most dramatic and Technicolorfully beautiful movies that we've ever had the pleasure of roaring about.

Now we do sound a little adjective-y. You know what we mean. Whenever you hear the phrase "one of the most" you sort of know the etymology.

Instead we're going to take a different stance. We're going to tell you what the picture is called and who's in it. Then see if you don't agree that this one is different.

Very good. The title is "The Unfinished Dance." The producer is Joseph Pasternak. The director is Henry Koster.

They are responsible for many memorable musicals. But while "The Unfinished Dance" is not strictly a musical, it is a dramatic story that deals with dancers.

The star is Margaret O'Brien—the biggest little star on the screen. (Adjectives again!)

The leading girls are Cyd Charisse, a poem on legs, and Karin Booth, ditto.

A new personality, Danny Thomas, seen on many a stage, is introduced in this—may we say unusual—picture.

Myles Connolly's screen play is based on the story by Paul Morand.

Now you know the facts. But what you don't know is this:

Little Margaret—in one sense of the word—plays a heavy.

At a rehearsal of the most wonderful eye-filling ballet (those adjectives again!) she pulls a certain back stage switch.

Her heart makes her do it—her love makes her do it. But did she commit a crime? Did she end the career of a person she would later grow to love?

What a great part does Conscience—the inner thing—play in this adjective-worthy film.

One could go on. But 'tis better 'praps to leave the column "unfinished"...

For you will surely see "The Unfinished Dance." —Leo

What Should I Do?

DEAR Miss Colbert:
I am a college freshman of seventeen. Although I have been told that I am attractive, neat, modern, and have a fairly good personality, I do not seem to appeal to the opposite sex.
Boys are friendly and respectful, but that is as far as it goes. I meet boys in classes, on the campus, and at church, but it seems to me no social good at all.
Please give me some advice as to correcting this situation.
Hildreth Ann T.

Psychologists have come to the conclusion that popularity is based upon accomplishment. Usually the most popular men in school are the athletes, or those who are working on the school paper, debating on school teams, etc. The ability to do something well is the keynote to admiration.
You should study your capabilities well, then select one particular talent and capitalize on it. Perhaps you like tennis—then become an expert. If you like bridge, become a whiz.
The greatest defeating factor is laziness. To do anything well requires determination, long hours of practice, and a willingness to perform when your technique has reached its peak.
So, get busy. Discover your talent and develop it and you will have more friends than you will have time for.
Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
I've been in love with a girl for five years, thirty-six months of which I spent in the Army. When I was discharged (January, 1946) I presented this girl with a diamond engagement ring. I'm twenty-three and she is twenty.
I went to work and with my first pay check I established a joint bank account in her name and mine. I bought her some pretty clothes and trinkets—simply because I loved her. She always told me that she loved me, too.
One day last month we had an argument, sort of a silly thing, and I didn't see her for about three days. When I did go to see her, she handed me the ring and told me that she didn't want to be engaged, and that she didn't intend to marry because no fellow was worth being miserable about.
Since then I have been to see her three or four times, and I even wrote to her, but she won't see me and she hasn't answered my letter.
All of this comes, I feel, from her starting work. Before she got a job she stayed at home, cooked, sewed and was a real woman.
Please help me by explaining what might have been behind her actions.
Dan M.

Subconsciously you know what has caused the change in your ex-fiancée's attitude, although you hedge about it in your letter. Since she has taken a job, she probably has met someone in whom she could become interested.
There is nothing you can do except wait to see whether she is going to return to you, newly appreciative of your loving kindness.
One thing you should do at once: Close your joint account with her. Social usage has always frowned for valid reasons upon financial sharing until a man and a girl are married.
There is little as embittering to a man as to lose his girl and his savings at the same time. You should protect yourself even though you trust this girl.
Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
I met a nice guy about a year ago. He was in the Army Air Force and was sent to Tokyo two months after we met. I wrote to him while he was overseas and we made plans to be married as soon as he was discharged.
All went well until he was actually out of uniform, then he told me that we were through. He didn't give any reasons or find fault with me; he simply said that he had changed his mind.
I love him and I would do anything to get him back.
I hope you can suggest some sure-fire way to interest him in me again so that we could go on with our original plans. Since we broke up I have no desire to go out with other boys.
Ora C.

There can be no doubt that your letter is of universal interest. No mail is delivered in the Photoplay offices which does not include at least a dozen letters, from both men and girls, asking how one should go about regaining a lost love.
I have talked to a good many authorities on human relations in regard to this subject without acquiring particularly good advice.
Trying to recapture a vanished emotion, or one that has changed, is futile. It is living in the past in the most useless sense.
Having lost a boy friend or a girl friend, a husband or a wife, the intelligent human being must regard the incident as part and parcel of the past and must turn a resolute face toward the future, secure in the knowledge that the future will provide even greater advantages—if one seeks them—than have been provided by the past.
Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
I have done some modeling and a certain amount of professional dancing, and I have always been lucky enough to have a date with a fairly attractive boy whenever there was a party or some event I wanted to attend. I am no raving beauty, but I like people, make friends easily and seem to get along well with men.
Already three different boys have asked me to marry them.
My ambition is to become an attorney. I still have one year of high school to finish, then I'll start my college course.
Personally, I don't want to get married for at least ten years. But—and here's my problem—once a girl has refused to marry a man, or even to go steady, he won't accept her career ambitions as a reason and concludes that the girl doesn't like him. That ends his telephone calls asking for dates.
Can you tell me how I can go on being popular and having a gay time without letting the boys get serious?
Mary Frances L.

I have a witty friend who says, with conviction, that it is much more difficult to remain single, popular and nice, than it is to give up and get married?
My friend, like you, is pursuing a career in which she is absorbed.
She manages the situation in this way: As soon as possible, after she has met a new (Continued on page 6)

However, there is this danger: A career girl, having stated her non-matrimonial intentions, is likely to become “good old Joe” to a series of ambitious young men who will depend upon her friendship, take advantage of her hospitality and talk at length about their mangled feelings because of some other girl’s indifference.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My sister is just a year younger than I am, but we are in the same grade at school because I lost a year due to illness. I get better grades in school, partly because I am older but my sister tells our friends that I cheat and that she does my homework for me. She says it in sort of a kidding way, but some people believe it. She also says that I steal. There was fifteen dollars missing at our music school one day, and she intimated that I had taken it. When I was asked, naturally I emptied my pockets and my purse and all I had was thirty-seven cents.

In our family we were brought up not to fight, so I haven’t said anything to our parents about this, but I am beginning to get sick and tired of it.

What do you think I should do?

Andrea N.

Someday, when your sister is away, I think you should sit down quietly with your mother and tell her the full story. This may be the beginning of serious trouble between you and your sister and between your sister and the outside world, unless something is done at once. It may be that your sister is jealous of you. Perhaps, during your illness your sister felt neglected because your parents were so worried about you and gave you so much attention. When you recovered, you represented further competition because you were in her class at school. I think the trouble might be cleared up if everyone in the family would reassure your sister that she is loved and cherished quite as much as you are.

But it may be that she is doing some of the things of which she accuses you. If this is the case, your sister needs the aid of a good psychiatrist. Luckily you live in a large city where it will be a simple matter for your mother to secure the name of a competent psychiatrist.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am eighteen and engaged to be married—or I was—to a boy twenty-one. Our trouble began when he said that Prince, my police dog, could not come to live with us after we were married. My fiancé hates and despises dogs because his mother died as the result of a dog biting her. Prince has grown up with me and I am devoted to him.

I haven’t the slightest intention of giving up my dog, yet I want to marry my fiancé. How can I keep my boy friend and my dog, too?

Dana S.

Your fiancé has had a horrible experience and one that, inevitably, will influence the rest of his life. If you regarded marriage as a partnership in which adjustments must be made, you would understand his viewpoint and accede to his request.

Your insistence upon keeping your dog in the face of his quite understandable reluctance indicates to me that you are still very much an immature youngster.

In your case the important consideration is not whether you are to relinquish your dog. Rather, it is whether you are ready for marriage, or have any concept of the meaning of marriage.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My childhood was very unhappy because of my mother’s greed, selfishness and bad temper. My older sister ran away from home when she was nineteen and took work as a domestic. She was wonderful to me. She bought my clothes and saved to it that I was able to finish school.

Six years ago my mother died, and shortly afterward my sister and I both married. When war was declared our husbands were both drafted.

My sister, whose health had failed by that time, could not work, and my father—who is a World War I veteran—wasn’t able to contribute to our support either. I supported the three of us out of my husband’s monthly allotment.

When he came home, he was furious with me. Now he wants me to establish a home away from my father and sister, because he says I can’t be a proper wife and mother if my time is taken up with my father’s and my sister’s problems.

I love my husband and I take good care of my baby, but I do think I owe my family a great deal, don’t you?

Helen B. R.

There are things about your letter which I don’t understand.

If your father is a veteran and ailing as a result of his service, why hasn’t he applied to his local Veterans’ Administration Office. He may be entitled to a pension or medical (Continued on page 8)

Certainly you must be concerned with your father's problem, but you should see that he investigates his status with the VA.

Finally, here is a truth that you must face: Unless the comfort of your husband and your child is your chief concern, you will surely lose your husband.

Dear Miss Colbert:
Each year I repair and dress all the dolls I can get—old ones of every kind.
At Christmas time I secure the names of little girls who are living in orphanages. The day before Christmas, each girl receives a doll and wardrobe, gift-wrapped with a card bearing the little girl's name. Last year I delivered fifty-four dolls.
I'm doing this entirely on my own; it is a charity for which I do not receive one penny. Those in this city who know my work have helped me collect battered dolls and have supplied odd bits of material, but it seems that I could always use more.
Do you suppose that your readers would be willing to package their children's cast-off dolls and odd bits of fabric and mail them to me so that, instead of making fifty-four little girls happy this Christmas, I might be able to double that number? Your aid will be deeply appreciated.
(Mrs.) Vaughn E. Seld Delgany Denver, Colorado

Now I believe in Mrs. Santa Claus! It gives me great pleasure to publish your letter, and I am certain that you will be astonished at the number of dolls you receive from PHOToplay readers.
Best of luck—and may I wish you the glorious Christmas which you deserve?
Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:
Can you please tell me what the requirements of a script girl are? Also to whom one would send an application in order to be in line for such a position.
I know that most girls dream of going to Hollywood to become actresses, but I dream only of becoming a script girl.
Cora M.

Last week in Hollywood, there were forty-seven pictures in production. Every cast was employing a great number of actresses but only one script girl. This will give you some idea of the competition for the script girl jobs in each studio.
Basic requirements for a script girl are possession of an acute power of observation, an excellent memory and a knowledge of shorthand and typing. Most script girls have worked up to their jobs by starting as utility (Continued on page 10)

It's Lynn Fontanne... in O Mistress Mine.
You've noticed how an actress acts with her whole self—especially her hands. They are her second most important medium of expression.
Naturally, she spares no trouble to keep them looking lovely. Nor should you. Lovely hands are important to every woman's "act."

"You cream your face to keep it smooth and lovely... well, CREAM YOUR HANDS too!"

The Mickey Rooneys at Ciro's, following their recent reconciliation. Something new has been added—to Mickey!

Heart Interest: Clark Gable and his favorite girl friend, Iris Bynum, had a sudden lapse of romance when their friends began taking the courtship too seriously; always a signal to retreat for the actor. Meantime Mrs. Dolly O'Brien, the Palm Beach matron who interrupted her romance with Clark to marry Jose Dorelis whom she is now divorcing, is back in Hollywood at the moment. At a Santa Barbara party together, Mr. Gable was dancing constant attendance on the fair Dolly. Handsome director Freddy de Cordova, however, finds Iris the dream "irl of the moment and seems to be rapidly extinguishing any torch the personable Bynum may be toting... A romance for the kids to approve is that reported between Roy Rogers and his leading lady, Dale Evans. And don't take it up with Cal, kids. After all it's Roy's prerogative to fall in love off the screen, isn't it?... Director Bruce Humberstone, who stood by Helen Walker through her serious traffic accident and ensuing troubles, now claims the actress has become too career minded for marriage. So their romance, as of now, seems over. Helen has a good role in "Nightmare Alley"... Dinner at The Tropics with Turhan Bey convinced Cal the actor is deeply in love with actress Linda Christians and is even contemplating matrimony. Both are continents, sophisticates and accomplished linguists. Linda, in fact, speaks seven languages including Turkish and Arabic... Charlene Wrightsman, daughter of millionaire Charles Wrightsman, arrived in town.

A Line or Two: Saturday nights, big party time in Hollywood, usually find Barbara Stanwyck and Bob Taylor in an M-G-M projection room looking at movies. Spencer Tracy and Katharine Hepburn, another pair of non-party-goers, also spend many evenings in projection rooms. If more newcomers would do likewise, they might become better performers . . . George Brent, who makes more farewell appearances than Harry Lauder, swears "Luxury Liner" will be his last. Then it's the South Sea Islands and the rest of the world forgotten for Georgie . . . Jeanette MacDonald, with her red hair atop her head, looking every bit a happy actress, songstress, and wife of Gene Raymond, contented to live in Hollywood between concert tours.

The Creepy Set: They warned us before we entered the sound stage where Olivia de Havilland is making "The Snake Pit," that this was far from a cheery set. They understated. The gloom and almost clammy atmosphere of the slate-gray walls and iron-barred windows are enough to bring on melancholy. Not a smile on any face did Janet Leigh looks amazed at Jimmy Durante's nuthurger (hamburgers with nuts—the house specialty) technique at opening of Bisbee's new drive-in at Beverly Hills.

Putt—and take: Keenan Wynn and his motorcycle club roared in for the opening and joined Jane Powell in a toast to the new roadside spot.

Men of Interest: So far the town doesn't seem aware of George Sanders's intention to quit it cold either for Mexico or Uruguay, South America. At least at this moment those are his plans, but despite his protest over living in Hollywood, he made quite sure he got his return visa. After his years of semi-seclusion, it seems odd to see George stalking about at all the parties and local bistros. A most contradictory and ambiguous gentleman, Mr. Sanders. William Powell, a real veteran of the screen, has come into his own again with his brilliant playing of "Father" in "Life With Father." Another almost-recluse, in Hollywood at least, Bill likes best his home life in town and in Palm Springs. "Mousie," his tiny wife, seems quite happy with the arrangement. Those who see Bill these days marvel at the pleasure he gets from his make-up in "The Senator Was Indiscreet." Nice if Bill won that coveted Oscar after all these years for that "Father" role.

George Murphy, a gentleman-actor, seems to have come out short on dancing roles lately, and wants to get back to tapping. George and his wife Julie have more or less given Hollywood the go-by for the less publicized but strictly social set of Gentleman’s Chores: The cast on the “Gentleman’s Agreement” set was amused at Gregory Peck’s daily chores on the sound-stage telephone. The Pecks, who moved into their new Pacific Palisades home were, like so many others, without a telephone so every morning Mrs. Peck handed her husband a list of calls to make.

Between takes before the camera, Gregory would call the grocer and butcher on the phone and order the daily supplies. "No, two cans of coffee," he'd order or maybe it would be the furniture dealer he'd consult.

It was heartening and somehow comforting to see a star of Greg's magnitude busily engaged in sharing home chores.

Incidentally, the guests who carelessly left open the garden gate which resulted in Greg's small son almost drowning himself in the pool, felt something of the anger of this family man. Greg now keeps the gate keys in his possession.

News—All Kinds: Good news that Judy Garland, back again in Hollywood, may go to work soon. Bad news that Johnny Coy and his cute wife Babs separated despite their new baby. Wonderful news that John Payne and Gloria De Haven have not only made a go of their reconciliation, but are reported to be expecting the stork. Pleasing news that both Anne Baxter and husband John Hodiak will work together in the Gable picture, "Homecoming." Interesting news that after a year's absence from the screen, Jeanne Crain returns to "The Flapper Age" with Glenn Langan as her leading man. Reassuring news that Van Johnson and Evie are not quarreling as reported. Fine news that Bing Crosby and Claudette Colbert refuse to make British films while the 75 per cent tax is on. Depressing news the large number of studio workers who have lost jobs due to the tax. Cheering news that Betty Hutton will retire from the screen for a year to have another child. Amazing news that June Haver and Jimmy Zito are said to have reconciled in the face of June's statement, and I quote, "We couldn't even part as friends." Oh, well, this is Hollywood where yesterday's news can be reversed in tomorrow's headlines.

Hedy and Mark: "You can say what you want about Hedy and me," Mark Stevens said to Cal as we sat together at dinner at Romanoff's recently. "In two days I'm meeting her at the airport and she'll go with me to Lake Tahoe and if you want to say we're in love, go ahead." A neat pile of pictures snapped of the two at Tahoe lay beside us on the table, and between entree and dessert, the story of their romance unfolded.

The night of our date, Mark was late. A bit of tardiness usually means nothing in Hollywood, but Mark is the soul of punctuality—often arriving before the stated time. So we knew something was very wrong.

"I'm visiting my son," he telephoned, "and I'll be along soon." But it was an hour or more before he arrived and knowing him as we do, we instantly sensed frustration and unhappiness.

The story broke next day that despite Mark's request for an immediate divorce, Annelle had agreed only to separate maintenance. Whether this be true or not, Cal can not testify. But unhappiness does exist for Mark; he's mixed up and in the midst of his love for Hedy, somehow depressed. With three husbands behind Hedy Lamarr and a career still ahead for Mark, Cal hopes he'll walk slowly into the future.

A few days before, Cal had lunched with Annelle Stevens, Mark's estranged wife, and had been impressed with her new-found assurance and radiant beauty, enhanced by her spirit of freedom. A charming, natural and honest girl, Annelle is determined to make a life of her own.

It's Looks That Help: Recently at Romanoff's, Cal noticed that Humphrey Bogart's hair, which fell out in chunks due to a nervous ailment, has grown back in and curly yet. As if to complement her husband, Lauren Bacall now wears her hair in soft waves and curls and the result is most gratifying. Now if only someone would apply a curling iron to that long straight hair do of Elizabeth Scott's, we'd be happier.

Dancing dynamo: June Havoc of "Intrigue"

Beauty Spots

By Frankly Enchanting

MARY

Eat—if you can—while lunching with June Havoc. The gal has such a dynamic personality that food's usually forgotten as you listen to her enthusiastic chatter. She'll tell you anything you wish to know about her and does so frankly and charmingly. That's what you like best about June. She's got beauty and brains, makes good use of both and works hard—harder, if necessary.

Her Feet Held Out

During a lean winter she worked on radio, in cabarets, understudied a leading Broadway role and won three dance marathons. One ran 2200 hours. Result—June's feet were practically ruined. However, during rest periods she bravely submerged them in cracked ice up to her knees for two minutes, then lay down for fifteen minutes with her feet elevated. This enabled her to go on dancing, and win the money prize! She doesn't recommend this for the average woman. It's too strenuous for anyone but a marathoner. Instead, she advises, stick your aching tootsies alternately in hot and cold water. Stock up on all the foot comfort aids you need and use 'em all the year round. Another trick learned during her dance marathon days was how to soften foot calluses by rubbing olive oil on them.

False, But Truly Lovely

In "Intrigue," June wears six different coiffures, several glamorized with false braids. Ever since then she often wears false additions to her blonde locks. She suggests you might like buying a false hair piece or two. You may have braids, curls, or chignon matched to your hair color. For a smooth look use hair lacquer. It's a new styling trick of which she approves.

The Feminine Touch

Once, when a part she played called for her to carry a tiny lace hanky, she received stacks of fan mail on it. Men adore little feminine touches like this added to your costume. June passes the tip along to you, so you can make good use of it.

Errol Flynn was so pleased with the co-operation of his leading lady, Ann Sheridan, in their last picture, “Silver River,” he invited a few close friends to a Hawaiian party in Ann’s honor. Shy and reticent before more than three people, Ann sat quietly on the sidelines listening to the Mexican troubadours who alternated with the Island music. She did tell Cal, however, how happy she was to achieve her dream of playing opposite Gary Cooper in “Good Sam” with Leo McCarey directing.

Artistry set to music: Katharine Hepburn, Paul Henreid and Robert Walker in scene from “Song of Love”

✓ Song of Love (M-G-M)

This is Schumann’s song—his life as portrayed by Paul Henreid, a fascinating interest-rouser of those fabulous days when the great courts of Europe resounded to the music of Liszt and Brahms. That adjective “sensitive” has been overworked so far as Henreid goes, but it must be used again in this instance where he takes over the poor, hard-working musician marked for great happiness in his love for Clara Wieck and great tragedy in his career.

Katharine Hepburn is Mrs. Schumann; it’s unfortunate that she takes her artistic role too much to her artistic heart. The result is an overplayed performance with Hepburn pumping that emotional pedal too hard. She is as tragic over the dismissal of a maid as she is over her husband’s death; she races breathlessly through her stilt with a self-sacrificial bustle that leaves her audience way behind. Unfortunately Robert Walker is just too much the young American to be the young Brahms, but Henry Daniell as the brilliant erratic showman Liszt takes his encore with finesse. Biographies differ about what really happened in the Brahms-Schumann affair; the film is the result of reading all the facts. And there’s always the music—rolling beautifully through a picture that’s going to keep you looking and listening all the way through.

Your Reviewer Says: A song to sing.

A reliable guide to recent pictures. One check means good; two checks, very good; three checks, outstanding

✓ Body and Soul (Enterprise-U. A.)

Mood music and mood treatment change this into something other than just a prize-fight story. Using his fists to get what he wants—anything with a dollar sign on it—John Garfield takes his role and shakes everything right out of it. How he slides down the moral ladder makes a film that has a lot of body blows about it; if you’re up to some good fisticuffs scenes you’ll find one of the best fights ever staged in this one.

The prettier side of the picture is Lilli Palmer as the gal who knows John’s all wrong. Just as pretty but not so perfect is one Hazel Brooks, a sultry-looking newcomer who doesn’t do more than look in most of her scenes but makes a fair enough bow. In the background is Mother Anne Revere, looking the strong and silent type and some racketeers of the prize-fight business who will give you a nasty turn two or three times.

It’s no hearts-and-flowers story; but on the other hand it’s not just a picture of punches. Besides, there’s Canada Lee, an actor whom you won’t want to miss seeing. Garfield and Palmer make good showings in their respective corners and the pugilistic proceedings have been handled with more than ordinary imagination.

Your Reviewer Says: Fight it out.
The Unsuspected (Warners)

DON'T let the title fool you—you'll suspect all along who's the guilty one in this minor thriller starring that old hand Claude Rains. It is his performance that takes this along in the right direction; without him it might have subsided without a whimper into another pale-faced mystery. Joan Caulfield is Mr. Rains's niece, a gal with lots of money and looks. Young Michael North comes along and tells her she's married to him; she doesn't think she is; neither does Mr. Rains. Things are complicated by Audrey Totter, who's snapped off Hurd Hatfield, beloved of Joan; things are still more complicated by murders to the right and left of you with that unsuspected one closing right in.

Joan behaves perfectly, giving no star performance but not stepping out of line. The rest of the workers, including Constance Bennett, follow suit, with the exception of that brutal-faced Jack Lambert, who looks just too ape-like to be real. The climax is supposed to come in with a thundering roar, but it's all so hopped up right at the end that you may even find yourself chuckling instead of clutching your seat. However, you'll get your money's worth. Forget all the drawbacks, don't look for perfection and you'll find a good enough movie.

Magic Town (RKO)

SEEING as how that long lanky Jimmy Stewart comes along in this everyone will go to see it. Depending on how much you like Stewart acting the patented Stewart role and how much you'll swallow about what may happen in a small town, you may or may not applaud the picture. It's a lot of business about a public-opinion expert who invades the perfect small town for professional reasons, ends up by wanting to stay there for romantic ones, gets Jane Wyman first against him, then with him and turns this American "Utopia" upside down.

It's unusual enough to rate a cheer; it's unrealistic enough to rate a brush-off. Wyman is a good actress; her quiet handling of the role of small-town Mary Peterman is apt sometimes to put the mannered Stewart at a disadvantage. The other small-towners are in the groove—Kent Smith, Wallace Ford, Regis Toomey, Ann Shoemaker. Touches of comedy come here and there from Ned Sparks and Donald Meek and the boys' basketball team might have been plucked from any town you'd point out on the map. But the goings-on are something else again, a bit too implausible to convince an adult audience, a bit too childish to be fantasy about Small Town, U.S.A. Mr. Stewart has something, so does the picture; but we wish both had used them a little differently to come up with a real winner.

Your Reviewer Says: It all depends.

Your Reviewer Says: Guess who did it?

The Unfinished Dance (M-G-M)

Stand up on your tiptoes to look at Margaret O'Brien floating around on her tiptoes as the prettiest little ballerina of them all. Straight out of a Technicolor storybook she comes, bowing gracefully to a graceful finished story about one small girl whose devotion brings her to the edge of tragedy.

Dancing around her are Cyd Charisse and Karin Booth, Cyd as the ballerina-idol of the small Meg, Karin as the strange pretender to the idol's prima-donna throne. The behind-the-scenes life of the ballet has a fairytail touch, so light that it brings the picture close to perfection. Charisse dances deftly, Karin Booth is somebody to watch, while the wistful Miss O'Brien can start stringing more hearts on her belt. The little-girl touch of these small-embodiments of charm is carried competently by Mary Eleanor Donahue and Connie Cornell; Danny Thomas is Mr. Paneros whose specialty is a love of rare things and real people.

You won't want "The Unfinished Dance" to have an end; it's just right as it is.

Your Reviewer Says: Classic specialty.

Frieda (Universal-International)

Here comes that man Rank again with another picture on a subject Hollywood could well have snapped up. It's the everyday picture of a soldier with a foreign bride who must adjust to a new country—only Mr. Rank's angle has a bit of dynamite in it. David Farrar is the Englishman who brings home to an English country village his German bride Frieda, Mai Zetterling. The characters that revolve about this situation are the usual ones—widowed sister-in-law, shocked mother, baffled younger brother, brilliant sister whose political career is jeopardized by the union. What they have to say is not usual—it is through Farrar, Florrie Robson, Glynis Johns and their cohorts that this dangerous problem is threshed out.

The audience listens with an ear to some strong statements and an eye to some smooth and even scenes of English family life. Underneath is the tragedy of the German Frieda, caught in the midst of a people who can't make up their minds as to whether she, the individual, is guilty of Germany's crime. The love story is handled softly; there is a harsh portrayal of the German who will wear the swastika forever by Albert Lleven; and there's enough to think about to keep your mind doing exercises for many a day.

Your Reviewer Says: Go and decide about "Frieda."

Life with Father (Warners)

For about six years people have come from all over the United States to take a look at Father who's had Broadway in hysterics. Now Father, thanks to Warners, is going out to give the U.S. a look at him. It's a wonderful look because he's William Powell who stomps his foot, twirls his mustache and gets handled by innocent-looking mother Irene Dunne as prettily as you please.

Powell is the wonderful father in a wonderful family-album background of an old New York brownstone and his doings plus those of his family will keep you as hilarious as any collection of ancient snapshots. There's Jimmy Lydon as Clarence Jr., Derek (Continued on page 28)
Will it ever come to this?

Will the law ever require women who are careless about their breath to wear bells warning others of their approach? It's not a bad idea. You can understand why if you ever came face-to-face with a case of halitosis (unpleasant breath).

This all too common offense is likely to stamp any woman, or man, as an objectionable person to be avoided.

Don't take your breath for granted. Don't assume it's O.K. when it may be quite the opposite. You yourself may not know when you're guilty. Let Listerine Antiseptic help to put you on the polite side. Use it before any date. Almost at once Listerine Antiseptic makes your breath sweeter, fresher... less likely to offend.

While some cases of halitosis are of systemic origin, most cases, say some authorities, are due to the bacterial fermentation of tiny food particles clinging to mouth surfaces. Listerine Antiseptic quickly halts such fermentation, then overcomes the odors fermentation causes. Never omit Listerine Antiseptic.

LAMBERT PHARMACAL COMPANY, St. Louis, Mo.
(Continued from page 26) Scott as Harlan, Johnny Cashmore and Martin Milner as John, cutting up as fast as they can to keep Father's blood pressure rising; there's Elizabeth Taylor to inject some young-romance touches, looking as pretty as a pintype and shepherded by the diverting Zazu Gwenn as the minister has his run-ins with black-sheep Father; the succession of maids scurry out of his way; and all the while taking Father for a merry buggyride is wife Vinnie, played perfectly by Irene Dunne.

Your Reviewer Says: Clever comedy on the don’t-miss file.

Kiss of Death (20th Century-Fox)

HERE'S a movie that has all you'll ask for in the way of mature entertainment. If you knew Victor Mature before the war, forget that "playboy" judgment you passed on him and see him as the realistic "squealer" in this new-type gangster film. Made in New York City, it is filled with the new-and-different, among them two people—one Richard Widmark, who's going to have you crawling under the seat as a moronic killer, and a fair-faced Coleen Gray, who has that breath-of-spring touch that will send her breezing along the Hollywood path.

Brian Donlevy's solid shoulder is right there supporting Mature and Widmark who between them carry off a film that will carry you off. Two nice little girls help motivate the plot as Mature's children, but if you think you're going to get an overdose of "daddy" sentimentality you're all wrong. The action is as simple as that of your own fireside and therefore has an impact you won’t forget. Two things can be said about "Kiss of Death"—first, it's not an ordinary film; second, see it and start giving thanks that Hollywood has started giving you the kind of film you want.

Your Reviewer Says: It has something you'll want.

Mother Wore Tights (20th Century-Fox)

ABOUT the cutest little mama around is Betty Grable, gracing as she does this light-hearted musical of the days when vaudeville was played before an asbestos curtain. Dan Dailey is the blustering papa who two-steps with her. This family act is seen through the eyes of little daughters Mona Freeman and Connie Marshall who slide along unaffectedly through the film, which is one big song-and-dance act with little ruffles of story about it.

The music you'll like, the dancing you'll relish. The Christmas incident where the two little girls of a show family are entertained by the troupe, including one clever specialty by Senor Wences, steps into the story spotlight, as does the sojourn of the four Burts in the Berkshires. Mama may have shocked her era by going on the stage, but she'll give this generation a nice look at the good old days.

Your Reviewer Says: Snug fit.

Caravan (Eagle-Lion)

This “Caravan” of J. Arthur Rank’s is composed of a long line of cutthroat out to get a necklace big romantic Stewart Granger is toting around to deliver to a friend. As you can guess, the plot’s straight out of one of those novels your grandmother may still have hanging around. Ann Crawford is the bell-bottomed and soulful-looking heroine Oriana and Dennis Price is the monacle-twirling cad. There’s a gypsy girl, Jean Kent, who comes to the rescue of the hero when he gets amnesia after his beating-up, but she can’t make any time at all with him when she mentions Oriana. Unfortunately, Oriana, believing her true love dead, has thrown herself right into the arms of the cad.

There are scenes in which people get properly grief-stricken, dastardly villainous and emotionally upset in a rather polite Victorian fashion. The audience, we’re afraid, is just going to be bored in their good new modern way.

Your Reviewer Says: Mr. Rank slips.

UNFINISHED DANCE: All the beautiful music heard on the soundtrack has inspired a new album featuring a narration by Walter Pidgeon and as an extra feature, two comedy numbers by Danny Thomas, who makes his movie debut in this picture (M-G-M).

SECRET LIFE OF WALTER MITTY: This hilarious comedy has the reformed Timid Soul imagining himsel-f a famous dress designer, thus setting the stage for one of Danny Kaye's great numbers, "Anatole of Paris."
This number is included in the Kaye Columbia record album (Set C-91).

SOMETHING IN THE WIND: The Deanna Durbin film has a record natural in "The Turntable Song," dedicated to disk jockeys. Sammy Kaye (Victor) gives it quite a spin and The Modernaires (Columbia) pair it with the picture's delightful title song.

SONG OF LOVE: The picture's best remembered melody "As Years Go By," based on the major theme of Brahms's Hungarian Dance No. 4, is tenderly sung by baritone Bob Houston and you'll want it for your own record collection (M-G-M).

BUGS BUNNY: The cartoon star of "Looney Tunes" and his friends, Porky Pig and Daffy Duck (all played by versatile Mel Blanc), win their own Capitol record album and the results should be eminently satisfactory for small-fry disk fans.

THE EMPEROR WALTZ: You won't find a better rendition of "I Kiss Your Hand, Madame" than the one Buddy Clark has plattered for Columbia. He makes this old ballad refreshingly pleasant.

MOTHER WORE TIGHTS: Dinah Shore (Columbia)

"Kokomo" with customary finesse. Throaty Mel Torme (Muscraft), who is due for a big M-G-M build-up, has his own way with "Kokomo."

BODY AND SOUL: This drama of the prize ring gives a new record personality, Sarah Vaughan, a good reason to sing the old Johnny Green ballad that inspired the film's title (Muscraft).

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: The lilting "Die Fledermaus" Waltzes of Strauss serve Leopold Stokowski and the Hollywood Symphony adequately for a new Victor Red Seal single disc... Jascha Heifetz selects Korngold's "March" and the well-known "Estrella" by Ponce for his Victor solo record of the month... There's a fine Andre Kostelanetz Columbia album, featuring "Rosary," "Souvenir" and the Traviata" has reached the record stalls in a boxed two-volume album, featuring the famed Rome Opera House singers and orchestra conducted by Vincenzo Bellezza.

It is beautifully performed and transcribed. The recording was made in Italy. An excellent libretto is included... Lily Pons sings her favorite songs accompanied by her favorite conductor husband Andre Kostelanetz for Columbia... Zino Frances-★★ Indicates picture rated "very good" when reviewed ★ Indicates picture rated "good" when reviewed

ADVENTURE ISLAND—Pine-Thomas-Paramount: The plot's from Stevenson's "Black Tide" and the acting's by that picturesque young couple Rory Calhoun and Rhonda Fleming; but even all the Cinecolor of the South Seas doesn't make this more than a good try at a good adventure story. (Oct.)

★★ BACHELOR AND THE BOBBY-SOXER, THE—RKO: The whoops of laughter keep rolling along with Cary Grant handling a comedy that has Shirley Temple a teen-ager pretending to be a model and landing with Cary in Judge Myra Loy's court. Brace yourself for real mirth. (Aug.)

BLACK GOLD—Allied Artists: Anthony Quinn as Charley Eagle is one of the nicest Indians ever; Katherine DeMille, as his wife, has just too much of an Oxford accent to be perfectly convincing, but you may still warm to the affair—horse races and oil wells—of Charley and his Chinese prototype. However, the gold seems too hidden to be worth much attention. (Oct.)

★★ BLACK NAZISSE—Rank-Universal: This is a strange movie based on Rumer Godden's strange book about some nuns up in the Himalayas. Kathleen Byron may give you some shudders as Eva personified, but Deborah Kerr is too restrained to be outstanding and the whole business, done up in magnificent Technicolor, has a sense of unreality. (Oct.)

★★ BOB, SON OF BATTLE—20th Century-Fox: A loved children's classic gets Lon McCallister and Peggy Ann Garner a chance to try out their Scotch accents. Everybody in the family can go along to watch shepherds' dogs being worked and Edmund Gwenn as a fine Scott in a film that's a little too drawn out to deliver any special goods. (Sept.)

★★★ BRUTE FORCE—Universal: A straight right from Hollywood with a strong brutal plot about a prison break and some just as strong and brutal portrayals by Burt Lancaster, Hume Cronyn and Charles Bickford. You'll mop your brow when it's over. (Sept.)

CROSSFIRE—RKO: An A-1 movie, dealing with plain facts and plain people—and the touchy subject of intolerance, in an intelligent and courageous manner. Robert Ryan and Robert Mitchum do an excellent job as two soldiers in the same company, but poles apart in their ideas. Robert Young plays the lawyer who solves the murder. You'll be involved up to the last minute. (Oct.)

CYNTIA—M-G-M: Elizabeth Taylor is Cyntia in a family story that starts off slow but ends up with everyone having a fine time in a pleasant atmosphere. James Lydon in A-1; Scotty Beckett gets a big laugh rating. There's George Murphy and Mary Astor, too, along with veterans S. Z. Sakall, Gene Lockhart and Spring Byington. (Aug.)

DARK PASSAGE, THE—Warner's: Some plastic surgery features in this, with Humphrey Bogart on the receiving end. Lauren Bacall exchanges weighted glances with convict Bogart who's on the lam; Agnes Moorehead and Bruce Bennett try hard to keep things in high gear, but it's still nothing to get steamed up about. (Oct.)

DEAR RUTH—Paramount: A picture to lift your spirits is this comedy about little Lila Freman who writes letters to soldier William Holden, using sister Joan Caulfield's name and photograph. Edward Arnold, and of course Burt Lancaster is miscast, as is Mary Astor; Elizabeth Scott and John Hodiak make an outwitted romantic team. (Aug.)

DEEP VALLEY—Warner's: On-the-dearly-side film about a broken-down family with Ida Lupino in between, fending mama Fay Bainter and Hennesy, and Wayne Morris being unexcellingly good and honest. Convict Dane Clark snaps Ida out of her depression, then comes the posse, then the beginning of boredom. Weak at the knees. (Sept.)

DESSERT, FURY—Paramount: Disregard this "Fury"—it's nothing but a cryptically told tale about a lot of unpleasant people out in the desert. Burt Lancaster is miscast, as is Mary Astor; Elizabeth Taylor and John Hodiak make an outwinking romantic team. (Aug.)

Dore Schary, new Executive Vice President in Charge of Production at the RKO Studios, is rapidly becoming one of the exciting figures in Hollywood film making. You saw his handiwork in the amusing but significant “Farmer’s Daughter” and now in the courageous film treating with anti-semitism, “Crossfire.” We present here the film credo of Dore Schary.

This is my credo, the things I believe in deeply, vitally, regarding motion pictures:

I believe in the contribution they have made to the world, and I’ll be glad to examine the record at any time with anyone. It’s something to be proud of, something that everyone connected with the industry is proud of. But we have reached a milestone. The question now is, where do we go from here?

I believe the answer lies in introducing the many intelligent adult subjects which have not yet been touched upon. A whole field of important issues lies fallow and we intend to plow it. For instance, justice in politics (not partisanship, mind you): respect for law, minority problems. There are great stories in these issues. I believe audiences will thrive on this more adult diet. Proof of this is shown in their response to “Crossfire,” a picture in which we pulled no punches in dealing with the savage, undermining influence of bigotry and intolerance.

I believe that every producer worth his salt must gamble. The biggest box-office hits have been made by men who were willing to get away from formula pictures and take a chance. This is healthy both for the studios and for the theaters. It’s a matter of leading with your chin and accepting the fact that you may get hurt. But it’s the only way of making the screen “grow up” and develop a definite point of view on things.

I believe it’s time we spent less and said more on the screen by the careful preparation of each story. Give a movie a real story and a real point of view, and you won’t need to spend a million or two to make it worth while. For this reason, I think that low-budget pictures should be approached with the same careful preparation as “A” pictures. They should be experimental in nature and should give opportunity to new writers, directors, and actors.

I believe whole-heartedly in the future of motion pictures.
Mister "King"

He stands at the top and has never had to move over for anyone. What else lies ahead for Clark Gable?

By Louella O. Parsons

When I first decided to tackle the assignment for a story about my old friend Clark Gable, I thought I could write it while I was buying a hat or having a massage or taking a nap.

After all I've known the King (and that is what everyone on the M-G-M lot calls Clark Gable, from prop boy to L. B. Mayer himself) for twenty years.

But it wasn't that easy, believe me. Some of the questions I wanted to ask him were pretty difficult. Such as, "Where does the King go from the top?" And, "What is in a man's heart when he has known and lost a great love? Is it possible to accept a 'second best'?"

So you see what I mean when I say it wasn't easy. However, the chance to talk naturally and easily with Clark came when he accepted my invitation to appear as guest on my radio show. As these shows require more preparation than you might think, it wasn't just one conversation but several that I had with Clark about the things that are ahead for him.

It was on the first of these trips to the house—we were sitting out in the garden after the others had left—that we began to relax and let our hair down.

The King, genial, amusing and as handsome as Lucifer, was stretched out comfortably in the swing, his sport shirt open at the throat in the (Continued on page 90)

As this is being written, the Cornel Wildes are together again. This writer had hoped for and expected this. Less than a week following the surprise announcement of their recent separation, they "dined out" at the Chanteclair Restaurant on the Sunset Strip. Several nights later Pat invited Cornel to the sneak preview of her very first picture, "Roses Are Red."

Sitting there in the darkened theater at Santa Monica, they held hands. This was the moment Cornel had dreamed about, fought for, wanted with all his heart. Even with a dark cloud of unhappiness hanging over them, they felt close to each other. It was a very special evening.

On September 1st, less than a month after the announcement of their separation, Pat joined Cornel in Del Monte, California. They left shortly afterward for Honolulu, Hawaii, on a second honeymoon. If they had failed to reconcile—or now fail to make it good—then even blase Hollywood will be keenly disappointed.

The unparalleled relationship of the Cornel Wildes has been outstanding in career case history. Schooled skeptics were frankly floored when on the morning of August 5th, Cornel gave out the following statement for publication:

"We regret to announce we are separating. Our troubles are due to circumstances beyond our control. I have (Continued on page 120)

RUMOR is on the wing—this time carrying tales about the health of one of the nation’s favorite stars, Miss Judy Garland. Fans from Maine to Mexico have demanded that they be told the truth. Via the press and the radio they have been apprised that Judy—(a) is on the verge of a nervous breakdown, (b) that she will withdraw from the making of motion pictures for several years, (c) that she is going into an Eastern sanatorium for an indefinite stay.

In the heyday of the great Gloria Swanson, rumor tried to play the same games with that vivacious lady, even going the last cruel step and decreeing her dead. Her studio was forced to hire the Astor ballroom in New York, invite all the members of the press, and insist that la Swanson, under a silvery spotlight, exchange a few words of personal greeting with each of the guests.

That lady tripped around the ballroom quietly quoting Mark Twain. “The reports of my death,” she maintained, “have been greatly exaggerated.”

All of which settled the Swanson problem nicely. But it would take something more than the Astor ballroom to solve the Judy Garland dilemma, for the issue is not quite so clean cut. Nevertheless, the hue and cry should be answered—and answered by fact, available to anyone in Hollywood who takes the trouble to look it up.

The first time Judy heard of her “serious illness” was via the radio while attending a dinner party with her husband, Vincente Minnelli. Naturally, it surprised her no end. “Could this be I?” she asked.

But Mrs. Minnelli, who, according to the other dinner guests, “never looked lovelier,” is a fighter. She did not propose to take the sentence lying down. She went straight to the telephone, called the radio station and, after identifying herself, demanded that the commentator be taken off the air. That is fact. There were a good many witnesses.

A short time ago Judy gave an interview to an accredited correspondent. He asked her about her health. Judy insisted on tipping her bathroom scales for him to prove that she weighs more now than she has at any time in the past five years. That also is fact.

It is a further fact that Judy is scheduled to report for work on the Irving Berlin musical “Easter Parade” around the first of October. She sat for studio photographers recently with Mr. Berlin while they were discussing the story. What’s more, she told friends she was mighty anxious to do that picture.

Now there comes that (Continued on page 85)

'VE got news for you.

I'm in love with a married man—just like the character in last year's song. And exactly like her, the married man is the man I'm married to.

I'm much more in love with my husband than I was the day we were wed. I didn't know what the word "love" meant then—and that's the truth. Oh, I was mad, wild, crazy about the guy two years ago on the September day when I became Mrs. Ted Briskin.

But that, I found out, is not love.

I'd met Ted in a Chicago restaurant. I was there on a personal appearance date and a big party had been arranged for me at the swank Pump Room.

But it was just too big. I slipped away from all the people who were being too glad to see me and went with my hairdresser to a cafe where I used to eat when I was in vaudeville.

Teddy came in. I took one look at him and said, "Anybody that good looking must either be a gangster or married." Just the same I flirted with him and he flirted back. It was fun because he plainly didn't know who (Continued on page 115)

The first headline in my private file of Most Memorable Hollywood Moments reads:

Frank Sinatra Threatens to Punch Me in the Nose

When Frankie first came to Hollywood for the launching of his picareer, he looked like a good kid who could use a break. Two of my syndicated newspaper columns and two of the guest spots on my coast-to-coast air column were devoted to interviews with him.

Now two plus two has a conventional total of four and in this case should have led to a beautiful friendship . . . not so.

During the shooting of "Anchors Aweigh," starring Frankie and Gene Kelly I went out to the set to get a follow-up on the soxers' swoon-boy for my column . . . something on the order of "Singer Turns Dancer."
After watching the shooting for a few minutes, I was mentally writing a very complimentary piece about Frank, when suddenly he saw me. Immediately, he stopped the shooting of the scene. Then he walked over to me and barked, "You'll have to have an appointment to talk to me. Can't you see I'm busy?"

There ended a beautiful friendship in the bud. The next day my syndicate carried a column in the "How Big Can You Get" department.

When my column hit the prints Frankie must have read it, for one of his "representatives" called to assure me that "Mr. Sinatra had confused me with another columnist." This, after I had interviewed him twice in the column and in person as guest on my air show . . . also twice.

For the next two years the boy made many mistakes (Continued on page 88)

"Where did Butch and mice go?"
Miss O'Brien was silent.

There's mystery here. The Case of the Vanishing Butch has angles.

Seems Miss O'Brien is the fickle type. Laurence Olivier was her favorite actor which was no skin off Butch's nose because it is well known that Sir Laurence is no slugger but only a Shakespeare actor. Suddenly Miss O'Brien went overboard for Burt Lancaster, the "Brute Force" man. It was only fan stuff, nothing personal. But a professional rival is hardest for an actor to take. Life is hard.

The Secret Life of Walter Mitty

James Thurber's timid, daydreaming hero comes to frantic life in Danny Kaye's scream interpretations of the dreams that made a man out of Mitty

1. "It's the worst typhoon in forty years!" In spite of the storm and the clinging blonde (Virginia Mayo), heroic Captain Walter Mitty (Danny Kaye) steers his ship to safety. Nothing daunts Walter in his dreams!

2. But in real life Walter is a henpecked timid soul who spends his noon hours shopping for his mother (Fay Bainter) and his days in a magazine-publishing office proof-reading the lurid adventure stories which inspire his escapist dreams.

3. Plans for a new magazine set Walter dreaming again. He is a famous surgeon, performing an impossible operation! Again the blonde, now a nurse, is on hand to pay homage to the man of her dreams.

4. The angry voice of his boss (Thurston Hall) brings Walter back to the office! He goes home—to dinner with fiancee Gertrude (Ann Rutherford) and her mother (Florence Bates). The furnace goes out—and so does Walter . . .
5. ... on a new daydream as Wing Commander Mitty, terror of the skies and toast of the RAF. The blonde, with a French accent, persuades him to do his equally famous impersonations.

6. Next day he meets his dream girl. She is real—her name is Rosalind—and she is being pursued by crooks who want a mysterious black book.

7. As an implacable Southern gambler, Walter dreams he wins Rosalind on a wager—and proves, sub, he is not without honor!

8. Walter and Rosalind hide from the crooks in a hat salon where he immediately dreams he is Anatole, the rage of Paris, whose hats go to American heads! Rosalind takes Walter to her home, is about to hand ...

9. ... her uncle (Konstantin Shayne) the book when she discovers he is an imposter and head of the gang. She hides it before they drug her and carry her away. "Uncle" persuades Walter's family he has been dreaming.

10. Confused, Walter decides Rosalind must be a dream, prepares to marry Gertrude. But as he reaches for the ring he finds proof she is real ...

11. ... and rushes to her rescue. On the way he dreams he is Killer Mitty, a Texan cowboy, who shoots to kill the villain who threatens Rosalind's honor!

12. Using the technique he learned from his adventure stories, Walter sets a trap for the gang—with results that surprise even the daydreamer himself!

Keyed to dinner dates: Singer Doris Day achieves a peg-top look

Necklace news: The eyes had it when Evie Johnson wore her dog-collar to Jack's Restaurant the other day
WELL, the battle over the new fall fashion foibles is really on hot and heavy in Hollywood. So much so that it's hard to tell whose "war" is the hottest—the war between the designers—or that of the belles who buy the clothes and want to wear 'em—and the babes who don't want to buy them until they see whether they'll stick or not. If you're wise, you'll wait until things level off a bit and settle to some sort of a compromise—instead of the mad extremes that are on the market now.

Adrian seems to be a lone wolf among the top designers because he is still garbing his patrons in the flattering broad shoulders, slim hips and sweeping evening gowns (while preserving the tiny waistlines so much the vogue) that enhance the best points of any gal. More power to him!

Those ballet-length (and some a little longer) cocktail and evening dresses are mighty swirly and pretty if you haven't thick ankles and feet like shoe boxes...because of all skirt lengths, the eight-inch-from-the-floor style centers the most attention on your feet. A gal who can wear 'em is Doris Day, the singer, who gets her first big role in "Romance in High C"—she's a Michael Curtiz discovery. Saw her at the Patio Room of the Beverly Hills Hotel in a lovely black moire dinner dress. Three deep vertical tucks at the waistline gave the skirt a peg-top look. The shawl collar of the bodice was off-shoulder and softly tied in front. She wore cobweb black hose and very high-heeled (smart girl!) sandals which laced about the ankle with black satin ribbon. Little antique diamond earrings and tiny short black velvet gloves and a box-like black velvet bag completed her chic ensemble.

SURELY you've heard of the "young man of the mountain"? His name is Gregory Peck—and he's on top of the world in more ways than one.

You see, Greg really lives on a mountain, in a home he built for himself and his family.

From the time when his life began at La Jolla as the son of a druggist until he hit his star stride, there were some tough climbs for Gregory. Yet once he reached Hollywood he made the astounding record of starring in his first two pictures and starting his third before the public ever saw him in "Days of Glory."

He climbed to movie prominence with such film triumphs as "Valley of Decision," "Spellbound," "Keys of the Kingdom," "The Yearling," "Duel in the Sun." His latest picture, not yet released, is "The Paradine Case."

Where did he get all his energy? The answer lies perhaps in this panorama of his life.

BY LYNN PERKINS
1. Greg Peck's love for mountain music began when he was twelve and accompanied his dad on trips to Yosemite—he learned to ride and shoot.

2. This is that gay college blade, Stroke Gregory Peck, in '38—before a fall on a slippery pier put an end to his athletic career. Greg's energies turned elsewhere.

3. Two years of study convinced him he'd never be happy as a doctor. So he took a truck-driving job, which meant eating hot dogs at roadside stands most of the time.

4. Back in college as an English major, he earned tuition looking down throats of cars for insurance underwriters. No stethoscope was needed for this job!
5. After graduation Greg decided to become an actor. A two-year scholarship at New York Neighborhood Playhouse eventually led to a role with Jane Cowl in "Punch and Julia" in Washington, D.C.

6. On tour with Katharine Cornell in "The Doctor's Dilemma," he met—a beautiful blonde, of course. She was Greta Kukonen from Finland, Miss Cornell's make-up artist. He married her.

7. Then Greg heard the siren song: "Go West, young man," so the Pecks went to Hollywood. He made such a hit that when Jennifer Jones decided to pull a gun on her boyfriend in "Duel in the Sun" it had to be Greg.

8. He learned Chinese for "Keys of the Kingdom," skiing for "Spellbound." At heart he's still an English major—his hobby, of all things, collecting words!
9. As the staid, dignified English barrister in "The Paradine Case," Gregory Peck gives one of the most outstanding performances of his career.

10. In some ways life is pretty much the same—whether you are the son of a La Jolla druggist or a famous Hollywood star—you chop wood when you want to keep warm.

11. Mr. and Mrs. and the Peeks' good boys. Steven the baby gets all the attention these days. But watch young Jonathan; the son of the "young man of the mountain" won't remain in the background all his life.
A man walked over to me the other day as I was getting into my car. He was a sedate man in his fifties and I knew there was no need to look for a policeman. “Hello, Shirley Temple,” he said. “I want to tell you how much I enjoyed your pictures when I was a boy.” He tipped his hat and walked away.

After he was gone, I didn’t laugh. The man meant to be complimentary. He had his own idea about Shirley Temple and there was no way I could change it.

It was a nicer idea than that of the woman who stopped me later in Bullock’s Wilshire. She stared down at me and then announced in a voice like a steam whistle, “Why, it’s Shirley Temple. I haven’t seen you in four years—when we had that lovely talk in that little bar. You haven’t changed a bit.”

She hates small talk and parties. She adores babies and puppies. She's shy, she's charming—this Deborah Kerr

BY SHEILAH GRAHAM

It happened at a Hollywood party. Robert Taylor was standing in a corner of the room, looking over the guests, when he noticed across the room a slender girl with glorious auburn hair and green-blue eyes. Turning to the man next to him, Bob asked: "Who's that girl over there?" The man told him it was Deborah Kerr. "She's beautiful," said Bob, and went on raving about her. The man looked embarrassed, finally broke in: "Incidentally, old man, I'm her husband!"

Bob is a sample of how this beautiful twenty-six-year-old British-Scotch star has taken Hollywood, as the redcoats could never have taken Valley Forge.

Every top star at Metro wants to make a picture with the lass. Gable got her for "The Hucksters." Pidgeon whooped with joy when she was assigned with him in "If Winter Comes." Spencer Tracy wants her. So do Van Johnson, Van Heflin, Bill Powell. Even Mickey Rooney wouldn't say no to Deb.

"Americans are so generous with praise," says Deborah. "So much more so than the British. There are stars here I worship and adore. I long to say to Garbo, for instance, 'I think you're wonderful.' And to Clark Gable. (Continued on page 118)

Whether it's a short cut to romance or the long road to success—the mercurial Mr. Grant plans it to perfection

BY MAXINE ARNOLD

SOME years ago when Cary Grant first came to Hollywood he dated a girl in Pasadena—a long twenty-five miles away. Before the freeway was built one passed everything but the Taj Mahal getting there.

For several evenings Cary made his romantic pilgrimage along bridle paths, around mountains, over rivers and through the patios of antique shops, arriving on the dot, tired but triumphant.

Then one day he got a pal of his who owned an airplane to fly him back and forth over the route. He made extensive maps indicating a right turn here, skirting two stables there and all in all charted the shortest possible path to Pasadena. He still remembers it.

Since then, after much off-and-on research, he has discovered the quickest way of pulling on his socks for making that early-morning studio call.

This academic approach to geography and hosiery is characteristic of Cary, the perfectionist. "All of us are perfectionists to some extent," says one star who’s worked with him. "But believe me, it’s literally a matter of life or death with Grant!"

It’s also a matter of his more serious side. A side usually lost in the pleasant shuffle of observing his deeply tanned face, blue-black hair, electric brown eyes, his hearty laugh, breezy greeting and debonair dimple in his chin.

HOUSES reflect our thoughts just as much as do our bodies.

So mused Rita Hayworth a little grimly as she shut the door for the last time on the ornate canyon-top mansion she had shared with Orson Welles. Certainly this showplace with its lushly islanded pool was no true reflection of herself. Nor was her life with her show-off husband.

Both were due for a drastic change. Divorce took care of the marriage . . . And a small house in secluded Brentwood, where tall trees drip shade over the roofs, and flowers spill across the green lawns, has taken care of the other. Of white-painted brick and clapboard combined, it is cool, comfortable, charming—a mirror of the woman who lives in it.

Inside the house its mistress, who's a lavishly decorative item all in herself, put comfort ahead of smartness. By coincidence, the two qualities came out neck-and-neck with a part of the coincidence provided by Wilber Menefee, Superintendent of Set Decoration at Columbia Studios, and therefore, expert on interiors.

First of all, the house is furnished with color. Literally that. Color doesn't cost you any more than the price of good paint and the possession of a harmonious eye.

For instance, in Rita's house, nowhere is there any pattern, period or ruling "scheme." Just color—so synonomous of Hayworth, and vice versa. Rita has a fondness for solid colors in (Continued on page 112)

BY ANITA COLBY
Photoplay's Beauty Editor

BOYS will be boys . . . and girls, you will be glad to hear, are going back to being ladies. For the first time since the war years, feminine lines are coming into their own again. The result—an entirely new look for women.

Watch your stars carefully—the stars on the screen that is—for that "new look." You'll see Betty Hutton for instance, with a whole new personality in "Dream Girl," created for her just through Edith Head's completely feminine and ladylike clothes designs. Before the ink was dry on Edith's sketch, Betty had purchased the screen dream for her own personal wardrobe.

You won't recognize that dynamo of melody when you see her trim figure encased in a black faille cocktail dress with pencil-slim skirt (really long) and full-flared overskirt to give it the rounded hip feeling. Pink tulle sprinkled with silver sequins is lightly tucked in the center of the bodice and on the sides to give the new shawl-effect.

And artful Ava Gardner, aware of the lovely feminine line given by a bouffant skirt, has added a Sorel import—a French Blanchinni pure silk taffeta gown—to her wardrobe for fall evening wear. The skirt is six yards wide! And the waist! A delectable line that could easily be spanned, as in grandma's time, with two hands. Ava carries out the "new look" in the butterfly strap (over just one shoulder and lined with tissue faille), the other shoulder tantalizingly bare.

But don't be lulled into a false sense of relaxation by this subtle softness. For what dresses like these do to your posture—and vice versa! No more spines like wilted string beans. That back must (Continued on page 86)

On a summer evening, a little more than three years ago, Catherine McLeod and her married sister Mary Jane O'Brien were sitting on the front steps of her sister's modest bungalow in Alhambra, California, talking girl talk.

Suddenly, breaking in on Mary Jane's chatter, Catherine said, "I am going to be a movie star."

Only half-heeding this irrelevant interruption Mary Jane said absently, "Really, dear? What for? So you can meet Clark Gable?"

Catherine returned, "With me, it is not a dream. It is a carefully planned project. I have saved a thousand dollars. I have made a set of rules to follow. The thousand dollars will finance me while, according to my rules, I play the game." There was a slight pause. Catherine added quietly, "I'll win."

Mary Jane said, "I wonder... well, maybe... my goodness, you do make me think of, let's see, Jennifer Jones, or maybe it's Teresa Wright. Or Claudette Colbert."

Catherine interrupted. "One of my rules is to try not to look like anyone else. Resemblance to a risen star can be fatal. I hope to avoid comparisons.

"The first rule is to have enough money to carry me while I campaign. That, thanks to what Dad left me plus what I have earned, I think I have. The second, to put myself in the hands of an established agent. The third, never to go to a studio (Continued on page 97)

10,000 Times More Beautiful Than Lipstick!

This Wonderful New Way To Color Lips

Not Greasy — Not Dry
Nothing on Your Lips at All But Lovely, Smooth Color

Something very different and heavenly has been created! A completely new, much more attractive kind of beauty for your lips—beauty so exquisite, so perfect, there has never been anything like it and you'll never again be content with anything less eye-catching, less flattering. I have worked seven long years to perfect my LIPCOLOR principle of lip make-up. Now it is ready for you to enjoy.

So Very Different from 'Lipstick'
It looks like lipstick and you apply it like lipstick, but oh! how beautifully different it is! Imagine! With my LIPCOLORS your lips will no longer wear a thick, pasty coating. They will wear nothing but concentrated color that stays and stays and STAYS, never piling up, never caking—never, never, NEVER deserting your lips in patches. Just sheer, flattering beauty, and every minute of every hour—right thru cocktails—right thru dinner—your lips will look and feel very well dressed, and much softer, much smoother than ever before!

How to Discover Your Most Flattering Lipcolor
I have fashioned my 'LIPCOLORS' in seven really breath-taking shades. Read about them here, then ask to see the Lady Esther Lipcolor card at your favorite department or drug store. This card shows exactly how each Lady Esther Lipcolor will look on your own lips.

There are Seven

Heavenly LIPCOLORS... STAR DUST—For night only—startlingly beautiful on anyone under electric light... REDDER THAN—So clear, so very red! Oh, so provocative...

STAR RUBY—An exquisite gem ruby hue sprinkled with the blue from sapphires... CRIMSON BRONZE—A quietly racey brown red that sings clearly but softly...

BRIDAL PINK—The freshest, rosiest pink ever... MOONDUST—A soft fuchsia that gathers golden glamour under nighttime lights... COY SIREN—An audacious scarlet—with a disarming aire.

Both are lovely on the table... can you tell which set costs the most?

Of course you like fresh, colorful Place Mats for your table! But don’t think that such sets must be expensive. The blue set, as illustrated above, cost $17.50... the yellow cost $31.50. Yet, because they were both luxury starched with LINIT®, they look equally smart and inviting.

You’ll like LINIT, the superior starch that makes cotton look and feel like linen. Use LINIT for all washables... easy directions are on every package.

Palm Springs Spree

Visit the Springs with a movie star and you’ll likely stop at the Racquet Club, owned and run by Charlie Farrell and his beautiful wife, Virginia Valli. The Farrells, whom I admire for their courage and imagination, live at the Club in the style to which they became accustomed when they were movie stars about a decade ago.

When Charlie and Virginia announced they were going into the desert to start this club their friends, not believing they would really do it, said carelessly, “You’re crazy! You’ll be lost without the movies.”

Charlie and Virginia grinned. “You’re crazy! We’re going to bring the movies to us!” Whereupon their friends, convinced they meant it and therefore that they were crazy, kept silent.

The Racquet Club consists of small exclusive bungalows built in the woods and around the pool, blue as the canopy of clear desert sky overhead. It’s at the pool that luncheon is served, that gin rummy is played in the afternoon and around which the social life of the club centers. And frequently you find Paul Lukas and other stars on the tennis courts close by. Paul flies down at every opportunity to play with the great professionals who spend much between-tournament time there, or with Billy Wilder, his most interesting non-professional opponent.

Last spring, when I was a house guest of the Darryl Zanucks, I lunched at the Racquet Club with Sam Goldwyn—and thought I must be back in Hollywood. Rita Hayworth and David Niven, having just come out of the pool, were lying on their tummies in the sun. A handsome couple they were too. And I can tell you there—most definitely was a desert romance under way at that time, regardless of what may have happened since.

Spencer Tracy was there, playing chess on the eight-foot-square chessboard comprised of lawn and flagstones, with foot-high pieces.

It was to the Racquet Club that Gene Tierney repaired last winter to recuperate from her sprained ankle. Janet Blair and her husband, Louis Busch, frequently weekend there. Paulette Goddard and Burgess Meredith run down at every opportunity, as do Evelyn Keyes and John Huston.

The food at the Racquet Club is divine and a great credit to Charlie Farrell’s father who runs the kitchen. Divine and expensive. But, then, nothing in Palm Springs is inexpensive. It’s like any other resort. The daily rate is about twenty-five dollars and up. At the Doll’s House, for instance, a favorite spot of Cornel Wilde and Pat Knight in their happy days together, the curry—which I must report to be most excellent—is about $4.00 a portion. It’s the same at Pago Pago where they turn on the rain at will and, hearing it drench the roof, you think romantically of the South Seas—and life is as dreamy as the Pago Pago proprietors meant it to be.

The Zanuck house, like many others, is adobe style. The swimming pool sits directly between the main house and the guest house which I occupied. The Doug...
PALM SPRINGS has one main street and, by the same token, one paved street. Here gay throngs parade in open cars, on bicycles and on foot. Window shopping is fun, for the swank shops along this main way are tempting with their bright resort clothes and wonderful riding boots and belts and harness. There's a drugstore, too, where you're likely to discover Lana Turner or one of the season's glamorous debs considering a bottle of sun-tan preparation or imbibing a double beaker of orange juice. There's a movie theater on this "boulevard."

And, farther along, is Desert Inn, the genesis of Palm Springs. Like the Racquet Club, Desert Inn is a series of small buildings but here they are set in a lush tropical garden. And a very exclusive inn this is too. If you plan to lunch there look to your credentials. At the dining-room door they will be sure to ask, "Will you please check in at the desk first." The desk, if it considers you properly dignified and well-mannered, will give you a ticket to the dining room. Otherwise you will be told they are filled up. Perhaps you will meet Shirley Temple and John Agar at the Inn. You're more likely, however, to see an industrial tycoon and his family, one of the officers of Bethlehem Steel, perhaps, or a Du Pont.

An incredible change from the days fifty-odd years ago when Nellie Kaufman hung out her shingle with "Desert Inn," inscribed on it. For the story of Palm Springs is the story of this plucky woman. With her husband and two small sons, she lived in the Middle West. However, her husband was tubercular and a dry climate was essential. So she gathered together her family and all their worldly possessions and started out. Across the prairie she drove, over mountains and into the desert. And one afternoon, because night was coming, she stopped at a funny little place with an Indian name that boasted one old broken-down road and scattered Indian dwellings.

The next morning when the sun came up over the mountains the air was like wine, trees grew in little clusters, wild flowers covered the valley floor and some of the encircling mountains, including Mt. Jacinto, wore crowns of snow. Deciding to stay, they built a shack. Every day Mr. Kaufman was a little stronger. Outside their shack Nellie Kaufman hung a sign; "Coffee. Sandwiches. Home-made pie and cake." Two travelers, crossing the desert, remembering the flavor of the coffee and sandwiches and pie and cake they bought at that (Continued on page 85)

The Truth About Judy Garland's Health

(Continued from page 89) other rumor that she was wrestling with a nervous breakdown. Judy was in the East, all right. She wanted no part of Broadway, and, among other things, she attended the Tanglewood Music Festival conducted by Koussevitzky, and strayed off to conduct performances in the surrounding area.

Then there was the matter of "Annie Get Your Gun." "Annie" unwittingly loosened a load of bird shot in the air for the rumor mongers because the reports that Judy was to do the picture were followed by others that were being given other hopes around the M-G-M lot. All of which was true. But figure the time schedule for yourself. With "Easter Parade" getting under way October Ist, Garland wouldn't be free until the first of the year, if then. So, if the studio wanted to get rolling on "Annie" before the winter was half over they'd have to use another star.

NEVERTHELESS, we cannot evade the evidence that Judy Garland has been overworked. She has put behind her what might be called an exhausting year. She and her husband rid their hilltop home in preparation for a blessed event. She gave birth to a daughter, Liza Minnelli, by Caesarean section. Her doctor advised her to take three months rest before she started work on "The Pirate" with Gene Kelly. She used that rest period to have a good deal of nerve-wracking dental work done.

Nor was there anything unusual in the fact that she worked part of the time on a "closed set"—a set from which visitors are barred. Many stars do so at all times. In this instance Judy had a tough row to hoe. Even the kids were enlisted as easy as possible—one surmises—and visitors have a pretty disrupting influence.

Talk to those grips or prop men who worked those closed sets. They'll tell you when Garland works for rehearsal or for a turning camera you have nowhere to hide from just watching her. When she sings, she sings! When she dances, she dances! At the end of a picture the girl is weary.

Rx: REST. Short trips around the country. Where? The only chance a star has to get a real rest is to keep that a secret. Judy has not always been on the gravy train by a long shot. It was not until she hit the ripe old age of fifteen that she made the big time—in Hollywood. She has never taken an honest vacation since then. She took time off to have a baby and went to New York on her honeymoon. But New York, for a big star, is not a restful vacation. Yet Judy Garland has turned out consistently fine pictures as regularly as anyone in Hollywood.

It is hard to believe, when you see Judy Garland, that she has been a top-ranking star for nine years. She looks incredibly young to have carried the burden of stardom for so long a time. There must be stamina behind that piquant little face, those fine bones and deep eyes that light to such beauty on the screen but which shadow so quickly when she isn't well.

Her first marriage was heartbreak and failure. It was not until she married Vincente Minnelli that Judy found someone with whom to share her work; if anything, shared too much of her work—and she has been kept constantly busy denying rumors that all is not well with them. Vincente is Italian, sensitive, temperamentally with a deep love for and understanding of music. The advantages of understanding, also have the disadvantages of two temperaments. The trick is that they don't both develop temperament at the same time according to Judy. When they do there is an uproar.

There has been one such and very likely there may be another. They are two high-strung artistic people—and when temperament complicates the picture, as it must when Judy forces herself behind her endurance, differences that a more phlegmatic couple might take in their stride are, of course, further exaggerated.

(Editor's Note: The persistent gossip that Judy and Minnelli will find it difficult to reestablish their old basis of relationship and go on together continues. However, there are no sure facts that they do not work together harmoniously.)

So under the spotlight of available facts the pieces seem to fit together. Judy Garland has put a big year behind her. She has borne a daughter, a daughter she has worked hard. She went East for a rest, and upon her return retired with her baby and nurse to the beach—to rest some more. However, she promises she will be back before the cameras within the year to sing and dance her way more deeply than ever into America's hearts.

BORDERLINE ANEMIA* can put ugly, tired lines on your face!

Thousands who are tired and pale may find renewed energy—restore healthy good looks—with Ironized Yeast Tablets

So many young girls watch the fresh color and beauty fade from their faces—wonder why tired, unflattering lines appear. They should know that such effects can come from a blood condition. If you have them, you may have a Borderline Anemia, due to a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency.

Yes, your red blood cells may have shrunk and faded—they may be weakened to the point where they cannot transmit full energy to all your body. Borderline Anemia steals your energy, endurance! And results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have it.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

If your color and "pep" are waning—and this common blood condition's to blame, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells to healthy color and size. Continuing tiredness and pallor may be due to other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly. But in this Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high"—to help restore your natural color. Take them so you can enjoy life again!

Why it can make you TIRED • PALE • LISTLESS

Energy Building Blood. This is a microscopic view of blood rich in energy elements. Here are big, plentiful red cells that release energy to every muscle, limb, tissue.

Ironized Anemia. Many have blood like this; never know it. Cells are puny, faded. Blood like this can't release the energy you need to feel and look your best.

The New Look

(Continued from page 74) be as straight as an arrow, the way grandmother's was in her heyday; the neck proud, the shoulders straight.

Despite the rounded hips of suits and dresses, make sure the curves belong to the dress, not to you! Don't think you can get away with hiding a multitude of poundage beneath. Start on the old bicycle exercise again... and walk... walk... walk. Golf, swimming and tennis are also wonderful sports for banishing "stenographer's spread."

And, with the new tiny waists and full skirts, milady (if she's going to be a lady) can't afford waistline spread either. A minimizer, or small corset, is either built into, or used as a decoration for many of the new fall clothes, but it won't hide what exercise and diet should have taken off long ago.

For firm muscles in this department, Ella Raines, before she goes to work in "The Senator Was Indiscreet," has this morning routine. Stand barefoot with feet about ten inches apart. Lift arms above the head with hands locked, keeping posture correct, tummy flat, bottom in and back straight. Bend far to the right and then to the left twenty times. Play fair and don't lean forward. Ella cautions, and you'll have her perfect twenty-six-inch measurement.

Of course, the new look is influencing our coiffures too. Soft and neat is the feeling. Naturally, your hair-do will conform with the new hats which are really hats for a change and not just a garland of flowers or a feather. Most of the Hollywood glamour gals are wearing chignon, braids and curls high enough to avoid collision with the great coat collars (worn very high in back).

Because these hats have such lush colors fashion dictates no hats in some instances. That means a lot of attention to hair grooming. Constant brushing of your top knot, no matter what basic style you choose, is more than ever. A weekly shampoo to keep your hair soft and fragrant, plus the brushing, should do the trick.

Shoulders are so important, too. Did you notice the beauty of Joan Fontaine's shoulders set off by the period clothes in "Ivy"? This is the kind of loveliness you must have to go with the charming chiffon, and organdies now in vogue. A bath brush and a good pure soap are the best known prescriptions for keeping your back and shoulders clean-skinned and ladylike.

To achieve a perfect ladylike harmony of face, neck and shoulders, be certain to use cosmetics that create a dewy unmade-up look, and a complexion as soft as this year's fabrics.

It perhaps is unnecessary to point out to you that you can't be a lovely lady and ever neglect personal daintiness. Ella Chase has been quoted as saying that the trouble with many of them is they don't know how to scrub! And my friend, Steve Hannagan, the well-known publicist, once said: "If you don't think a smell counts, ask a fox."

So be a soap-and-water girl. By all means select your deodorant carefully, experimenting until you find one that suits your special needs. Remember, too, the cleaner your body, the fresher your clothes will remain.

It will take a little more time and effort on the part of all of us to fit ourselves into the frame for the new Portrait of a Lady. But, we'll be dressing up a great deal more and what girl doesn't like to dress up?

But nothing came in from Frankie until the day he sent me this wire from New York: “Just continue to print lies about me and my temper, not my temperament, will see that you get a belt in your vicious and stupid mouth.”

Lies, he called them. My reply was simply, “I’ll be in my office any morning. Don’t bother to open the door, Frankie, come through the crack.”

Then after three years of feuding with me, Frank Sinatra takes a poke at another columnist, Lee Mortimer.

Did you know that the headlines, a certain newspaper chain started accusing Sinatra of being a Communist. That was too thick for me. I don’t mind a private scrap but fair play is fair play. In my column and on the air, I came to Sinatra’s defense. I didn’t believe he was a Communist and said so.

That evening at home we were at the dinner table when the phone rang. My nickel-and-a-half phone was apt to give home-answered. She is a Sinatra fan and she had that pale purple swooner’s color when she rushed back to me. “Daddy, oh Daddy, said Sinatra’s on the phone . . . I mean . . . Oh, it’s Frankie,” and she swooned.

My six-year-old son, reared in strict anti-Sinatraisism, rushed upstairs for his baseball bat and the phone. Sure enough, after three years, it was the Voice which said, “Hello, Erskine . . . this is Sinatra. Heard your program while driving home this afternoon and I almost fell off my chair reading it. I wanted to thank you for coming to my defense.”

Well, that was that . . . it is a memorable moment to have a love crooner offer to poke you in the nose. It’s completely out of character, but Sinatra is a writer and sent it to Frank Sinatra for future identification purposes, and am continuing to fill out my collection of Crosby records.

I had an air show five times a week and no giveaways. This, mind you, when most any woman could get up and make a fool of herself for three minutes on the air and walk out with a refrigerator on her head. Frank Thought I had won an automobile prize, and no fumadiddle needed it to win. So I picked Bob Cummings, wrapped him in cellophane tied with a big blue bow and bid the ladies write me letters.

No luck. No mail. The judge of the contest, a letter explaining what she would do with Bob Cummings for a full day, if she won him, and the best letter would win the prize. The winner of the contest got to star with Johnny Weismuller. Joan Leslie, Irene Rice, and Grace Allen, the judges, spent weeks reading the 50,000 letters received. Bob Cummings read the letters, too. He grunted and groaned, laughed, and cried. “I hope this gal doesn’t win,” he said of one. “There’s a limit to how far this thing can go, prize or no prize.” Some of those women really had right bright ideas.

I had Edith Vincent of Delmar, Delaware, as the winner. Her letter said: “If I had Robert Cummings for a day, I would ask him to come and help clerk in my husband’s grocery store, because I wish him to see how a man acts when he gets with folks in a small town in a real life situation. In the evening, we could show him a little local night life.”

Grace Allen brought me the winning letter. “Tell Bob to take his corn plasters with him,” she said.

Bob and his wife, Mary, flew to New York and the next morning hopped over to a field near Delmar, Delaware. Just before their early morning take-off, Bob said, “Tell my wife I’m back.”

“You’re back? In case you didn’t get mixed up in this anyway Stop.”

I waited and wondered all day, then Bob called me in Hollywood that night from Delmar. This is what he said: ‘The Vincent are swell people and I’ve had a whale of a day, OUCH! Mrs. Vincent, that’s Edith, the winner, met us at the airport, took us to her college, then WBOC, the Mutual station where she heard about your contest. OUCH! We went to the grocery store and met Bob, her husband. Did you know that peas are not just peas? There are small peas, large peas, medium grade, dry and canned in No. 2 or No. 3½ tins or frozen. And why didn’t you tell me about those inferior care regiments?”

“I ran my legs off, and so did Mary. Big rush at the store. There ought to be a Society for the Prevention of, OUCH! Cruelty to Grocery Clerks . . . I’ll be presiding at the meeting, we had a good-cooked dinner at Edith and Bob’s. What a meal, the Derby couldn’t touch it. Fried chicken and all the trimmings.

At a local street spot, we found out it was Edith’s birthday . . . and the whole town turned out to help celebrate it. Mary and I haven’t had so much fun in years. OUCH! I wish Edith had won the Daughter’s Day contest, we’d like to know these people better.”

Before I hung up, I asked Bob what all the oozing was about.

“Isn’t soaking my feet in Epsom Salts and putting a blob of ice on them over on them . . . OUCH! I’m scalded.”

The contest was a success, Bob and Mary Cummings had the time of their lives and Edith had her movie star for the day.

For $21.23 short for the day was to win a wrist watch as a runner-up!

For nine months in Hollywood, between columns, I was a press agent for a couple of famous names, Leslie and Graham Baker. Our job was to push motion pictures with anything we could think up along the publicity line. I was stuck with a picture called “Little Men,” a picture no one wanted. We gave away acts, gave away prizes, a gross of bubble-gum with each admission.

One morning I sat at my desk swaying to Towne, Baker and the whole bloody business, when I spied a picture on the bank. It was the Borden Cow, shown in her boudoir at the Chicago World’s Fair.

Brain storms hit suddenly in Hollywood. I rehearsed that in the picture “Little Men,” Kate Franklin, the Borden Cow, was a cow. I wired the Borden Milk Company an offer for Elsie to be that cow.

Borden wired back right back. “Great, doctor and cow. We’ll take care of all expenses and plug your picture in our ads.” I was a genius, I thought.

Elsie completed her engagement at the Chicago Fair, climbed aboard her special train, and came to Hollywood with her nurse, her vet and the President of the Borden Company. I released the story of “Elsie Goes to Hollywood to Be a MOO-vie Star.”

We paraded The Milk through Los Angeles streets in a boudoir truck with a white picket fence around it down to the Ambassador Hotel where she entertained the Press at a “Pasture Luncheon.”

Alice Allen took up residence on the RKO lot to await her call to the cameras. It was getting to be Elsie’s picture by now. She reported for make-up one morning at 7:30 milking time, got her false eyelashes and they shot her scenes.

When the picture was almost ready for preview, we planned a reception at Ciro's.
To keep the gag rolling, Edward Stevenson, fashion designer on the RKO lot, made Elsie a low-cut glamour girl dress for the occasion. John Frederics created a hat for her. Everyone wanted to get in the act. Others contributed silk hose and shoes for her extremities.

Borden's assured us that she was nightclub broken, so at the cocktail hour, I took Elsie into Ciro's, stood her in a pink spotlight in the middle of the dance floor.
An English butler was engaged to an-ounce the 350 invited guests and two milk maids dressed in tin buckets and little else stood by Elsie to make the introductions.

On the stage behind her, a string ensemble serenaded with "How Ya Gonna Keep 'Em Down on the Farm" and the whole soiree was moo-ing success.
The next morning, the whole Hollywood woke to a scandal. Elsie was going to have a baby! And I didn't even know she was married!
The studio wanted her for retakes, some of the scenes needed a change or two, but she had gained weight. That presented a problem, but not for long. They rewrote the picture, and changed the ending to climax in Elsie's Blessed Event. And that's how Beulah was born.

Elsie wept milk-punches when she left Hollywood, but the rest of us took the straw from our ears and celebrated.

It was a year later that I read of her tragedy. Elsie was head for another cocktail party and the report said that she fell off a truck and broke her neck. But for anyone who can read between the lines, the truth is evident. She saw the picture, "Little Men," and took the short way out.

JOHN GUNTHER has been "Inside Europe" and "Inside Asia," but I claim the distinction of having been "Inside the Ladies Room at Romanoff's."

Barbara Barondess, an interior decorator of note in our town, met me for lunch at Romanoff's to give me the lowdown for my column on how she had decorated the homes of the stars.

She mentioned a number of the more popular names whose mansions had felt her tasteful touch and wound up with, "I also decorated the Ladies' Room here at Romanoff's. Would you like to see it?"

I swallowed an imaginary bone from the chicken a la king on my plate and mumbled something about "some other time."

"Oh, it'll be all right," she fluttered.
"I'll see if the coast is clear." With which she swayed off in the direction of the inner sanctum, and I went later popped her head out the swinging door and crooked a finger at me.

I never walked stark naked through a crowded church, but I couldn't have been more embarrassed than I was on that fifteen-foot stroll toward that sanctuary.

Once inside, she bubbled on about "See this," and "See that," and "Isn't it the most beautiful Ladies' Lounge you ever saw?

It seems, after all, that I was a frequenter of Ladies' Lounges, dec-ated or not. All I wanted to do was get hence. La Barondess was leaning protectively against the outside door, playing Horatio to stem the tide of intruders who might interrupt our tour of inspection.

I took a quick look around, took mental note of some French can-can dancers painted on the walls, and rushed out in an atomic exit in time. Her fiancé stood just outside the door, rummaging through her purse in search of a nickel.

Mister "King"

(Continued from page 40) informal manner he prefers when he isn’t “done up” for a movie. At forty-six—and he doesn’t deny a year of it—he is still one of the best-looking guys that ever ingratiated his way into a woman’s heart—including mine.

It was after one of those comfortable conversational hulls only old friends can enjoy that I asked him, “Where do you go from the top?”

The swing rocked on a couple of times before Clark said, “You keep on going. There isn’t a place anyone ever reaches where you don’t keep on going straight ahead—particularly where your work is concerned. Believe me, Louella, you are through when you begin to think you’re on top. That is the mythical place where you start sliding down!”

“That’s just the point,” I argued. “You don’t ever slide! Adventure wasn’t a good picture but the Hucksters put you right back on top! Were you really angry with the studio during those long months when you refused script after script between those two pictures?” That rumor had certainly been well circulated—even to the point that Clark was retiring.

“Of course, I wasn’t angry with them,” he answered quickly. “The studio was just as eager as I to make my comeback after the war a successful picture. I admit I didn’t like the story of ‘Adventure.’ But, I blame myself as much as anyone that it wasn’t as good as my earlier movies. The trouble was, I had war jitters. Like every other guy back from the service, I was nervous and restless. I was pressing too hard. We were all pressing too hard. Result—it was all very de-pressing!

“When it was over, I realized I was going to have to get away for awhile and fight this thing out by myself. When ‘The Hucksters’ was first submitted to me, I didn’t turn it down because I didn’t like the script or the story. I just wasn’t ready to tackle another picture so soon.

“So I went away on fishing and hunting trips with an occasional fling in New York, dining or dancing with a pretty girl. And all of a sudden the kinks were ironed out. I was raring to get back to work. Why, at one time, I even thought of retiring, and am I glad I didn’t! Lucky for me that no one took me seriously.”

That dancing-dining—with-a-prettv-girl reference gave me just the break I had been waiting for. “Do you think you’ll ever marry again?” I asked, hoping the words didn’t sound as though they jumped out of my mouth. When I had asked that same question several years ago, he had said, “No. I’ll never marry. I had the best in the world in the love of Carole Lombard, and there can never be another woman to take her place.”

This time Clark didn’t reply immediately. He seemed to be deep in thought. Then—“I don’t know,” was the unexpected answer. “I can’t say for sure. It gets awfully lonesome living alone. Do you think there is a chance for happiness, after you have been so in love in another marriage?”

I knew what he meant. Carole had given him a special kind of companionship, as well as deep love. They had so much fun together. She brought so much gaiety to the relationship.

But I said what I really felt—that if he gets the right girl there should be happiness in congenial companionship.

“They’ve tried to marry me off often enough,” the flash of his teeth revealed that loveable old Gable grin. I’m sure we were both thinking of the long string of charmers “rumored” as having caught Gable's heart. There were—Virginia Grey, the beautiful blonde actress, to whom (to quote the columns) "Clark always returns;" Dolly O'Brien, the sophisticated New York matron for whom he was supposed to have "carried a torch" when she married Jose Dorelis. Dolly has since divorced her husband and is now in Hollywood. Clark takes her out and has had her at his ranch. They also spent a weekend at Santa Barbara with Constance Bennett and her husband, Colonel Coulter. At first I had thought this was "it," but I've changed my mind. After seeing them together at the Zanuck party I am confident it is not serious. While Clark is very courteous he doesn't act like a man in love. And believe me, I have seen Clark when he has been head over heels in love.

Also on this list, are: Millicent Rogers, Miss Money Bags, herself, who followed Clark to the Coast on several occasions; Iris Bynum, a Hollywood beauty with whom he dined and danced several times. Then there was Anita Colby, the glamorous girl executive, who would give up any date, any time, for Clark.

We saluted the parade of beauties silently before Clark said, "If I do marry again, it will probably be sudden. Unless you have the girl already, marriage is one of those things you can't really plan for the future, Louella. Sure, you can hope you'll find the right one, but you never know when or where if ever she'll come along."

He went on, "I have a friend who was a confirmed bachelor. If he told me once, he told me a million times he would never get married. Then he meets a girl, knows her a few weeks, and the next thing you know I am in San Francisco being best man at his wedding."

That's an old story that invariably amuses men when it happens to the other scientific truth

you can trust!

No smart woman has to be sold on how important vaginal douching is. But she certainly should learn that no other type liquid antiseptics—germicidal tested for this use is so powerful, yet so safe to tissues as zonite. Scientists tested every generally known antiseptic and germicide they could find on sale for the douche. And no other type proved to be so powerful yet so harmless.

Cautions Against Weak or Dangerous Products

Pity those unfortunate women who, because of ignorant advice passed on by friends, use 'kitchen makeshifts' in the douche such as vinegar, salt, or soda. By now they certainly should know better. These are not germicides in the douche. They can't possibly give the great germicidal and deodorizing action of Zonite.

Zonite positively contains no phenol, no mercury—no harsh acids—over-strong solutions of which may damage tissues and even impair the functional activity of the mucus glands.

Zonite is non-irritating, non-burning, non-poisonous! You can use it as directed as often as needed without the slightest risk of injury.

A Modern Miracle Developed By Famous Surgeon and Chemist

Zonite actually destroys and removes odor-causing, clinging waste substances. Helps guard against infection—it immediately kills every germ it touches. You know it's not always possible to control all the germs in the tract. But you can be sure Zonite does kill every reachable living germ and keeps them from multiplying. Complete directions for douching come with every bottle.

fellow and, as per custom, Clark was laughing about it now.

"If a girl, the right girl, came along in your life—which type would she be?" I put in while I had him on this hook. But do you think I could pin down a smart Huckster like Clark?

"Types really don't matter," he hedged, "I have been accused of preferring blue eyes. But I have known some pretty attractive redheads, the Pettys and yes, women with gray hair. Age, height, weight haven't anything to do with glamour." He must have realized he had tipped his hand a little here for he quickly admitted:

"I'll beat you to the question. Yes, I am intrigued by glamorous women. And before you jump in with 'What's glamour, papa?' I'll tell you what it is to me.

"It's that inner something that inspires a woman to express outwardly, 'I'm something special and distinctive.' I don't mean conceit or vanity, two awful traits. Maybe this will explain what I mean—a woman is continually taking out a compact to repair her make-up. A glamorous woman knows she doesn't need to.

"Take Joan Crawford—she's a queen of glamour, dressed to the teeth and knowing what she is doing every minute. Deborah Kerr has another type of glamour—the charm of sweetness and femininity. Ingrid Bergman's glamour—and she is one of the most exciting women of today—is the glamour of complete naturalness."

Clark raved so particularly about Ava Gardner, I asked him especially about her. "No," he laughed, "I'm not in love with Ava. It isn't anything personal that makes me believe she will go far. Perhaps as far as Lana Turner or Jean Harlow.

"Ava just has what it takes. The first day we worked on 'The Hucksters' I was worried about her. It was at my suggestion that she had accepted such a small role and I wondered if I had done right in urging her. She was in fast acting company with Deborah, Adolphe Menjou, Sydney Greenstreet and Keenan Wynn. Then I took a look at the rushes. 'Gable, my boy,' I said to myself, 'Every man for himself. That girl's good.'

"That is what I mean when I say there's never a goal you can reach and then relax. These newcomers are constantly fighting to get there too. When you're there, you're fighting to stay. If you want a good career, you have to keep at it all the time.

"I cannot understand some of these kids who think they are all set the minute they get a studio contract. How can they go out dancing every night when they have work, and good hard work to do? No one can loaf with more enthusiasm than I—but I still believe that when I have a job to do, nothing in the world comes ahead of it."

"You just can't keep the goods this business gives you—and refuse the responsibility. I feel it is up to me to read good books and see plays that might make good pictures for me and that this is as much my job as it is a studio's."

"In a way I'd like to get back to the character of some of my earlier hits—the tough guy with an all-right heart. I don't want to be Janson forever. It's swell for him, but I couldn't do that woman-slapping sort of thing well. But find me another 'Boo town,' 'San Francisco' or 'Red Dust,' and I'll be happy."

He was getting up now and we walked together toward the house.

"With all your arguments about my having no place to go from here, Louella," he said, "you're dead wrong. Every picture I make is every experience of my private life, every lesson I learn are the keys to my future. And I have faith in it."

And that philosophy, my friends, is what makes Gable what he is today—still King.
(Continued from page 64) didn't say, "Madam, I never saw you before in my life. Four years ago I was fifteen and I've never been inside a bar." The woman wouldn't have believed me.

And then there's another group that says, "When you were a little, little girl, I bounced you on my knee." One week I counted up the people who told me that. There were twenty-seven of them. Sometimes I wonder how I had time to make any pictures if I were being bounced on so many knees.

If this confuses you, just remember it confuses me, too. After all, I'm Shirley Temple and I ought to know something about myself. But I end up sometimes wondering, "Who am I?" Right now I'm going to try to answer that question.

When I was young, Mother never showed me any stories about myself in magazines or newspapers. Later I could read them if I wished. After reading a few I stopped. I was recognizable in them, but somehow, it was always some other person's concept of Shirley Temple and, in many cases, an idealization. I'm no princess or tingoddess and I wouldn't want to be either. I've had a good life and a fortunate one. I love my work—acting. I work hard at it. And I have my share of vanity. I like to feel I've brought people pleasure on the screen. But it was an accident of fate, of timing, that gave me the chance.

I'M NINETEEN years old and sometimes my feet hurt and sometimes I have headaches. Frequently I want things I can't have, and won't get. Often I'm angry with myself and often I'm disappointed.

That makes me like lots of other girls. Sure, there's a difference. I'm in the movies, have been for a long time. That has made me public property, like the Smithsonian Institution and Grant's Tomb. As a result, almost everything I've done for years has been publicized. Some stories have been true. Others have been lies.

Long ago I learned not to pay any attention to the lies. Now I'm trying to get my husband, Jack Agar, to treat them the same way. But it's harder for him as he's newer to the movie world and gets riled by stories which make me giggle.

When he's really irate, I tell him my favorite story. I was five when a chain of European newspapers printed a story that I was a thirty-year-old midget with two children. One newspaper even sent a correspondent to Hollywood to ferret out the real facts. He was probably disappointed when he discovered I wasn't a midget.

The most annoying stories these days are the ones that have our marriage breaking up. Not long ago one appeared and gave the inside "dope." It seems we were splitting because Jack liked to listen to symphonies on the radio and I liked murder mysteries. If Jack had been able to find the author of that story there would have been a murder and no mystery.

But here's one story that I'm happy to say now is true... Jack and I are looking forward to having our first child in the early part of next year. We're naturally both excited about it and terribly happy. I'd like it to be a girl and Jack says he doesn't care what it is "as long as it's a boy!" That's a man for you. As far as the name of the child goes, we're still looking. But neither of us want "it" to be a "junior."

I'll continue acting as long as I can before the baby is born. But when she—or he—is very young I'd like to stay home. After the baby is a little older I'd like to go back to work.

You see, I get jittery when I'm idle. It was some time after I finished "Honeymoon" and "The Bachelor and the Bobby-soxer" at RKO that I started in "That Hagen Girl" and I really got restless. But now I'm busy again and am looking forward to working with Jack in his first picture, John Ford's "War Party."

I've always had ideas on how I'd like my home someday and after talking to Jack about them the decorator and I had great fun putting the plans to work. We're living in a charming home (at least we think so) we had built for ourselves in West Los Angeles. When anyone asks about the house I purr like a contented cat.

I'm proudest of the way we redid the downstairs—because I did this all myself—where the doll collection has always been kept. It's been turned into a play room—a dancing room, really—with panels that have landscapes on them. The panels can be drawn back to show off the dolls. I still get additions to the collection and I love exhibiting them.

Maybe it's feminine, but I hate shopping. When I have to get clothes, I do it as quickly as possible. I like simple lines and unbrash colors. I do let myself go on hats and evening dresses. Some of mine are giddy. But for everyday wear I stick mainly to suits.

I have a great many faults and I think I know most of them. My temper, for instance. When I get mad I cover it up. Then it simmers for awhile and I finally blow up. Usually at something trivial. You might say I have a delayed-take temper—too delayed. I'm trying to cure that.

I also suffer from "foot-and-mouth" disease. Nearly every time I open my mouth I put my foot in it. I'm trying to be less outspoken and, even harder, trying to keep some of my thoughts to myself.

Another of my failings I blame on heredity. Anyway, on my father. That's my habit of kidding with a straight face. I find that sometimes it hurts people's feelings, which is the last thing in the world I want to do.

Jack helps me a lot with one big fault. I can't remember names or faces. I could get away with it as a child and Mother always covered for me. But now I'm on my own. Luckily, Jack has a memory like a traffic cop and can tip me in whispers.

I'm looking forward to being old enough to vote because I feel like a citizen. I got that feeling as I grew up during the war. The hospital tours were largely responsible. I'd walk miles through the wards and rooms, talk with wounded men, visit with boys from all over the country.

And, long before the term "One World" was coined, it seemed like one world to me. I received letters and dolls from everywhere. Many of the dolls were dressed in native costumes. They all had the same bodies, the same number of features—two eyes, one nose, one mouth, two ears. It was only the dress that differed.

National boundaries didn't exist for me. The people who wrote me, regardless of the language, all seemed to be the same kind of people, interested in the same things, seeing the same moving pictures. It didn't matter what their color or creed.

That's why the headlines, the stories in the papers about international squabbles and arguments, never seem quite real to me. There isn't much difference between people.

All I really want out of life is to live a useful existence in private as Mrs. John Agar and a useful existence in public as Shirley Temple, an actress who can give people a little pleasure. That seems to me the most wonderful life anyone can have—useful, full and happy.
Promenaders

(Continued from page 57) director Lewis Milestones and Dusty Anderson and director Jean Negulesco gave at the Huston ranch (in San Fernando Valley) to celebrate their one-, twelve- and one-year-wedding anniversaries respectively. And what a lovely setting it was! The low rancho rambles between two knobs and has an enormous porch the whole length of the place (seemed about a mile long) that was set with plaid-clothed, candle-lighted tables for the two hundred and more guests. A huge buffet and bar indoors (where a small hot band provided dance music) and another dining and drinking arrangement outdoors furnished “refreshment” from nine p. m. until the sun was actually high in the heavens!

NE of the reasons guests stayed so late was the wonderful impromptu entertainment furnished at the piano by Johnny "Body and Soul" Green, with Georgia Gibbs, Betty Garrett (Larry Parks's wife) and Sono Osato, the little Japanese dancer in Hollywood to make a picture, dishing up songs like mad while Danny Kaye and Edgar Bergen, who usually do a lot of entertaining at parties themselves, just stood around and applauded. A big bunch of the younger star-set kept the place jumping—and if you don’t think that Robert Mitchum is a jitterbug de luxe, you don’t know your “cats.” Teresa Wright and Mrs. Doug Fairbanks sat most of ’em out, because both should be welcoming Sir Stork as you read this. But Van and Frances Heflin, Ann Rutherford, Ida Lupino and her big moment, Collier Young, Cesar Romero, the Dana Andrewses, Joan Fontaine (in a lovely strapless dress of heavy white lace, heart-shaped bodice and full skirt), the John Garfields—and oh so many more—tore up the floor. Lana Turner, with Ty Power (natch!), was wearing a black satin gown, her prettiest feet glimpsed below the hemline which was about six inches from the floor. Bodice was tight with panels of smooth black marquisette over the shoulders. It also had a corset effect, with lacing up the back. Waistline was longish, the skirt very full, with a four-inch band of the black marquisette finishing off the hemline.

I must have been prophetic, for when I ran into the Cornell Wildes that evening, I started to introduce Mrs. W. to someone and asked her, “Do you want to be introduced as Mrs. Wildes or Miss Knight?” Pat looked quizzical—glanced toward Cornell and then said, “Well—I don't know—I've made two pictures.” A few days later they announced their separation! Career trouble, no doubt. Two careers. Some people really take it big. Too big!

A recent big premiere brought out the glamour pusses in droves. Looking charming because of her simplicity was Esther Williams in a white lace and marquisette evening gown, the top of which was a mohair-torso line of white lace over nude and finished with a small cuff of the marquisette at the hip line. From there fell a very full bouffant skirt. Esther wore white suede gloves with this gown—but we can’t imagine why.

Roz Russell was there in a dark red chiffon evening dress, bare on one shoulder—the other covered by a continuation of the drape of her bodice that ended in a long scarf.

Odds and ends worth mentioning are Evie Johnson’s silver-plated “dog-collar” that she wore to La Rue for dinner. It caught a lot of eyes besides Van’s. The biggest thing! And she has a bracelet to match. That stunning “salad-bowl” of a hat was really something too. A big inverted mushroom of gray felt (worn rather back on the head) and trimmed with rows and rows of black sequins. A wonderful lid for simple black dresses or dressmaker suits.

Casual, yet dressy enough to be worn on any daytime occasion is the two-piece suit that serves so many purposes for Vera Ralston. It's a light-weight doeskin wool crepe with a top of soft coral and has a form-revealing seafoam skirt. It has an ascot and snug-fitting belt of black and white taffeta. With it go white doeskin gloves, black kid pumps and bag. Vera also has a good looking cocktail dress that consists of a black crepe skirt gathered slightly in front, with a simple white crepe blouse that has a black sequin trim (a spray of wheat heavily accented by a graceful outline of the black sequins too) at the left shoulder. A stunning black Persian lamb jacket goes over the combination—and it has full sleeves, a fitted waist and flares slightly around the hips.

And speaking of coats, I'm crazy about the one that Janis Paige calls her "comforter." She wears it to market—or to "make her mark" any time of day. And though it's of a bright coral shade, it would be a real comfort to anyone in any color. It's a mass of fullness from shoulder to hem, great full sleeves, with turn-back cuffs, great big pockets with double flaps and even its tailored collar has "big ears." It has large, self-covered buttons. The kind of a coat you can wear wrapped around you, belted or buttoned—and vary the color of the belts as well.

And here's a suggestion, thanks to Bonnie Cashin, the fashion designer. She has one of the best-looking fall coats in town that she calls a "horseblanket" coat. She bought a beautiful red and white blanket at a saddle shop, had it made into a coat with a full swing back and only one seam (down the back) and set on a yoke. You couldn't ask for a better looking sports job—and for almost no money at all!

(Continued from page 78) and apply for a job but to work is luck or little in the hope that the studios will come to me. The fourth, to remember that once you sign with a major studio, you have just begun. Fifth, to do as you are told. The sixth, to bear no resemblance in appearance or in your work to any star.

A little more than two years after this talk, Catherine, in Republic’s “I’ll Always Love You,” became a star.

This amazing “with the rules” is one of those rarities—a Californian by birth. She came into being in Santa Monica, California, but at a very young age moved with the family to Alhambra, there, “with the exception of a year spent in Dallas, Catherine has lived ever since.

Catherine went to Ramona Convent to school until the Dallas move where she landed in time to take her senior year in a public school. Then the Cinderella pattern began. “I was a cashier in a movie theater in Dallas. I car-hopped. After my Dad died (Mother died when I was eight) I went back to Alhambra and during the war, worked in a defense plant.”

It was while Catherine was working in the Clary Multiplying Corp. that she met Bill Gerd. They were married four years, and on January 3rd, 1947, were married. They kept their secret well for about eight months when an Associated Press man happened to see the marriage license record in Reno, Nevada.

Bill, originally from Milwaukee, is now studying at the College of Physicians & Surgeons in San Francisco, where he and Catherine live when she is not working in a picture.

(ATHERINE’S ardor for Clark Gable was the cause of her being expelled, although only for three days, from Ramona.

“In your room at the convent,” Catherine explains, “you could have pictures of your father, brother, uncle, cousins, the Holy Family and the Saints. In my room was a large framed portrait of Clark Gable. The Sisters told me I had to take it down. ‘But, Sister,’ I protested, ‘that’s not a picture of a boy friend—that’s Clark Gable, the big movie star.’ Sister took it down. I put it up again. Sister took it down. This went on for days, and finally I found it in my wastebasket, torn to tatters. Painstakingly, I patched it together again. I put it back on the wall—and was expelled!”

Movie magazines were her textbooks in her quest for stardom. “I practically memorized the stories of how Ginger Rogers, Rosalind Russell, Ingrid Bergman and others became stars. I found that they all agreed that an agent, and a good one, is a basic necessity. I tried to approach you, rather than to approach, a studio, to be a smart apple.”

Catherine looked up an agent—in Dun & Bradstreet. Mr. Louis Shur, ace ten-percenter, having given me a substantial bill of solvency, was paid a call and contrary to all rules was agreeable to the young unknown.

After delivering himself of a sermon on birthing a new star, Mr. Shur said, “I will take you to the studios Monday.”

Catherine said, “Oh, no. Take me, instead, to a little theater or a good dramatic school and watch me.”

On a Monday Mr. Shur, protesting that to take a client to the studios was part of his job, took Catherine to the Pasadena Community Playhouse. The Pasadena Community Playhouse would not take Catherine. But Mr. Max Reinhardt did and after a few productive months with Mr. Reinhardt Catherine enrolled in the Bliss-Haydon Workshop of the Drama and there

Catherine went back to work canning tomatoes in commercial shorts until Mr. Laurence Langner of the New York Theatre Guild came to Hollywood and auditioned for subordinate parts in the Guild's "Oklahoma" and "Foolish Notion." One of the few chosen was Catherine. She was offered a two-year contract with the Guild, but Mr. Shurr demurred.

"What can I do to keep you here?" he asked.

To which Catherine replied, "Get me the lead in an 'A' production—and I'll stay."

"If that's what it takes," said Mr. Shurr, as concisely, "okay."

Frank Borzage was testing name actresses for the part of Myra Hassman in "I'll Always Love You." But a name actress, when it came to finding one at liberty, was a needle in the haystack and Mr. Borzage was "reduced to testing newcomers." Newcomer McLeod was given a test and without much notice. Mr. Borzage tested for three and a half hours. The next day the test was run. Mr. Borzage told Catherine, "Your acting is pretty good; your looks pretty bad."

"When I explained," Catherine says, "that I was working under the handicap of two layers of make-up—one for canning tomatoes, the other for the test—they tested me again. A make-up test, this time, strictly hair, clothes, lighting ..."

The second test won her the role.

The day the picture started, Catherine discovered that her name had been changed to Cathy Marlowe. "Gee, boss," she said, "let me keep my own name. My Dad and Mother are dead, you know, and I—we'll, I'd like to keep McLeod for Dad and Catherine for Mother, whose name it was."

Mr. Borzage crossed out Cathy Marlowe. "Done, Miss Catherine McLeod," said he.

A few days after the picture started, co-star Philip Dorn asked Catherine how it felt to be walking, so soon, among the stars. Catherine, looking bleak, shook her head. "You see, I haven't been given a contract which makes me feel temporary and insecure. I can bear bodily pain better than a feeling of insecurity."

A few moments later, the grapevine to the Front Office having functioned swiftly, Catherine was given a contract.

However, the McLeod insecurity should be dissipated by now, because her studio has now cast her in what is going to be one of her big pictures of the year, "The Fabulous Texan."

"How are you going to feel," my sister asked me, "When you are a great, big movie star?"

"I wouldn't feel like a big star," I said, "Until I mention that I want a Coka and, quick like that, someone on the set brings it to me. Just between you and me, I tried it on the last day of 'I'll Always Love You' and no one brought it!"

The End
Did I Say Candy?

(Continued from page 53) inspired her mother to have named her Angela just as the Angel softly said, "I carry two guns."

"Shootin' guns?" I cried, prepared to do a Butch.

"One," she said ominously, "clicks. The other does not click."

The one-click chick was headed for the Hitching Post theater. She attends Sunday afternoon as regularly as she goes to church in the morning. It's a Jekyll-Hyde transformation. In the morning a tot in bobby-sox and bonnet carrying a rosary, in the afternoon a tootin' terror in jeans.

The Jekyll-Hyde change is nothing for Margaret. She's protean in life as on the screen; actress, dancer, radio artist and columnist at eleven. And all this she is giving up to become a dog trainer. That's the scoop she gave us in the first interview in six months.

"Is that material?" she asked.

"Sensational."

She smiled and turned to her mother, "That's material, Mommy."

Miss O'Brien became a writer last summer. She uses a portable the Philadelphia Ledger gave her and two fingers. Twenty newspapers leaped for her column.

"Now you are one of us dear!" cried a Big Sister columnist. "Don't you love it?"

"I would rather be a dog trainer," said Miss O'Brien.

She likes writing, though, and feels literary. Her library is growing.

"How many volumes have you?" asked a fellow bibliophile.

"Twenty dog stories," she replied. "I also read Superman, Bugs Bunny, Captain Marvel and Donald Duck."

Happily she will continue acting a while longer. She does not plan to adjourn to the kennels until a dilapidated crone of twenty or thirty.

Having read of the hard work and tribulations that go with stardom the inquiring reporter asked her what she found hardest.

"Nothing is hard," she said. "It's fun."

She feels sorry for children who cannot act, only play.

"I like to play too," she said. "I play jacks, jump rope, skate and swim."

Mrs. O'Brien sold their house and moved into a beach club this summer. Margaret took a running dive into the breakers and proceeded to swim uninstructed like a baby porpoise. Admiring life guards said she sure would be another champ like Esther Williams.

There was a time when Miss O'Brien talked of being a lady jockey. One does not speak of that now. Wally Beery's horse ran away with her. That was on his Wyoming ranch, doing "Bad Boscomb." Cowboys congealed as the horse pounded over ground pitted with holes. Margaret clung to the reins and the horse took her into the barn. Miss O'Brien emerged in favor of dogs but no hard feelings toward horses.

She has only one fear, that of being alone. Mrs. O'Brien takes the blame for that. "Her aunt and I felt it necessary to warn her when we were traveling."

She is not temperamental. Her mother gave her the privilege of naming the temperamental member of the family. Margaret only smiled discreetly. Mrs. O'Brien made a clean breast: "Mommy is the one who blows up."

"You are bad only a moment," said Margaret indulgently.

Of her pictures, the last one is her favorite. The last one is always her favorite, her mother says. In "The Unfinished Dance" she does ballet and in-

A couple of Lucy Barrymore to the screen.
Miss Barrymore is a doll with a face painted by Mr. Lionel Barrymore.

Her next picture is "The Big City."

"I will speak three languages, Gaelic, Spanish and Jewish," she said. "I don't know them yet, except Spanish, but I know the Barker's spiel... I have to imitate a circus Barker."

With her mother she made a trip this summer to Cuba and New York. Mr. Barrymore, obviously her most ardent suitor, gave her a red suitcase stamped "Journey for Margaret." She carried it all through herself, trusting to one. "It was embarrassing for me," said her mother. "People stared at me as I walked along carrying nothing while my little girl wrestled with the heavy baggage."

Of the New York plays Miss O'Brien reported most favorably on "Alice in Wonderland." She thought Ingrid Bergman in "Joan of Lorraine" finest actress. Her screen favorite is Vivien Leigh, whose unfortunate husband, Sir Laurence Olivier, has topped before Mr. Lancaster.

"I like food," she confided. "Except milk. My favorite food is spaghetti. Also ice cream and hot Mexican food and I have Chinese food three times a week and did I say candy? You can say I like candy."

"YOU mean it's an acceptable gift?" said a reporter who can take a tip.

"Oh yes," said Miss O'Brien, too democratic to accept only diamonds.

"Mommy bought me five dresses in New York. One is red velvet." She added that her favorite color was lavender, same as her grandmother, and she preferred skirts and sweaters. She was wearing a sweater of watermelon pink.

"That is my favorite food also, watermelon," she said. "Did you put down candy?"

Another favorite is President Aleman of Mexico. She was waiting in a crowd to see him in a New York hotel and she came directly to speak to her.

"She blushed to her hairline," her mother said. "And forgot all her Spanish words."

Miss O'Brien observed that the President was handsome enough to be a star.

"Did you tell him?"

"No," said old diplomat O'Brien. "He is more important than a star."

Being highly sensitive as fine artists are, Miss O'Brien blushes often and is easily embarrassed. At age five when she first faced a microphone she was humiliated to note that all other radio performers carried scripts which they read from. She didn't need one because she memorizes lines as fast as her mother reads them to her. All the same, she determined to learn reading and raced through first, second and third readers in sixty-seven days.

She always gets the shudders in facing a mike but never misses a line. Her favorite programs are Superman and Red Ryder. Also Dick Tracy, though she hasn't received that two-way watch for which she sent fifteen cents and a box top. She got her atomic ring all right. Cost her ten cents.

Recently Mrs. O'Brien thought the time had come for more serious programs. She asked Margaret if she would not like to listen to radio commentators.

"You listen to them, Mommy," said Miss O'Brien. "I will read the funnies."

Such wisdom requires no comment. If we did as Angel O'Brien, peace might return to nations and to the home. Lion might consort with lamb and Butch be reconciled to Lancaster.

YOU CAN SAY Merry Christmas 3 WAYS with just 1 recipe!...

Big Fruit Cake... little Fruit Cakes... and a Pudding—all made with the same wonderful KARO® Syrup recipe! Every one of them rich and moist and with that delicious flavor KARO always gives. My Mom says it’s a grand idea because you can make ’em all ahead of the Christmas excitement. (Just wrap well and store in airtight container.) I say, “Better not let me know where you hide ’em!”

THE KARO KID

YULETIDE SAUCE

Combine 2 egg yolks, ½ cup KARO Syrup, Red Label, ¼ cup orange juice and ½ teaspoon salt in top of double boiler. Mix well. Cook over boiling water, stirring constantly, until mixture is slightly thickened, about 3 minutes. Add 1 tablespoon Sherry Flavoring or 2 tablespoons Sherry. Cool. Chill. Just before serving, beat 2 egg whites until stiff but not dry. Gradually beat in 2 tablespoons sugar. Fold in egg mixture. Makes about 2½ cups. Serve with Steamed Pudding.

FRUIT CAKE

1½ lb. seedless raisins
1½ lbs. dates, finely cut 1½ lbs. assorted finely cut fruits and candied citrus pecans, almonds, and chopped citrus peel
1 tsp. baking powder
1 tsp. salt
1 tsp. each allspice, clove, and nutmeg
1½ c. orange juice
1 c. shortening
1 c. brown sugar
1 c. KARO Syrup
Red or Blue Label
Vegetable shortening
4 eggs, well-beaten

Weigh and prepare fruit. Dredge with ½ cup of the sifted dry ingredients. Cream shortening; add sugar; cream until light. Add KARO; mix well. Add 1 cup of dry ingredients; beat until smooth. Add eggs; beat well. Add orange juice; mix well. Add fruit mixture. Fold in remaining dry ingredients. Bake in well-greased loaf pans, lined with waxed paper, in slow oven (250° F.) 4 to 5 hours, depending upon size. Place shallow pan of water on bottom oven rack during baking; remove during last hour. (Cake improves with age. Prepare well in advance. Wrap and store.) Makes 5 pounds.

STEAMED PUDDING: Use Fruit Cake recipe. Omit fruit, substitute ½ pound each seedless raisins, chopped dried figs, finely cut dates and candied citrus. Place in greased 2-quart pudding mold or individual custard molds. Cover tightly; steam 4½ to 5½ hours for large molds; 1 hour for small molds. (Reheat for serving by steaming 1 hour.) Makes 1 large or 20 individual.

Edward Stevenson offers

10 WAYS

TO BE A "WELL DRESSED WOMAN"

Edward Stevenson, who designed our Pattern of the Month, at work in the RKO Radio Studios.

* "You can be well-dressed on nothing a year! But you can't be well-dressed for nothing!" So says Edward Stevenson, noted designer for the stars at the RKO Studios. He adds, "If you lack money you must compensate by spending more time in planning and hard work."

To help you towards this end Eddie Stevenson offers ten rules for chic which he has learned the hard way, by experience in gowning players for a thousand different roles. Currently he is creating the costumes Irene Dunne will wear in "I Remember Mama."

1. Know thyself. Study your face and figure with an unprejudiced eye. Do not excuse figure faults by telling yourself you will diet next week. Face a full-length mirror and put on, one at a time, every ensemble in your wardrobe. Note what each does for you—or fails to do. Mark well the skirt line, body line, shoulder formation which is flattering. Eliminate the others. Make the same check with color.

2. Learn to walk, to sit, to stand, to move with good effect. Otherwise a million dollars worth of clothes will not make you truly chic, someone to whom eyes will turn admiringly.

3. Avoid clothes which hamper or distract you or which have to be held closed or up or down. Do not wear a shoulder bag if it makes you walk hunchbacked. Do not fill your hands and arms with cumbersome accessories, bags, bundles, gloves or scarf. Wear your accessories or leave 'em home. Choose clothes you can put on and forget.
10 WAYS TO BE A "WELL DRESSED WOMAN"

4. Buy clothes that fit. Do not yield to the charm of any suit, dress or coat if the alterations must be extensive. It never will look or feel right—and neither will you. Besides, extensive alterations ruin a budget.

5. Keep your clothes spotless and in repair always. You cannot be well-dressed if you have a button off, if your hem hangs, if your veil is torn, if your collar is ragged or soiled. Washing and mending must go on forever and ever and ever if you would be well-groomed.

6. Avoid all fads; fads in color as well as style. If "everyone" is wearing puce, avoid puce. All too soon "everyone" will be throwing their puce away. And you cannot afford to.

7. Base your wardrobe on classics—those coats, suits and dresses which are good year after year and which, with an enchanting variety of accessories, may be worn with different effect until they are worn out. And don't make the mistake of thinking that basic clothes must be black. Pick the color that gives you a lift, is most becoming and right for your climate.

8. Remember that one of anything is an extravagance, two an economy. You cannot keep a suit clean and in repair if it is your only suit. Two of any garment (particularly two pairs of shoes) will last more than twice as long as one.

9. Learn to sew. I do not mean to tailor elaborately. Just learn how to mend and repair your clothes, to alter them to keep them up to date, to brighten and refurbish.

10. Investigate fabrics, tailoring, labels. Watch sales and learn to spot a bargain. But never buy anything—however cheap it may be—unless you need it.

There you have it—straight from one of Hollywood's most eminent designers—a man who for years has helped the stars solve their personal wardrobe problems in addition to creating the clothes they wear on the screen.

Rita Hayworth Lives Here

The living room, with its ceiling beams of driftwood gray, has walls of a shade called "ashes of lemon" by Menee—a grayed yellow, which melts unobtrusively into the gray-green carpeting throughout the house. The upholstered pieces, including specially designed "conversation couches," are tufted in bottle-green velvets.

There's an over-sized coffee table with an antiqued mirror top and green plants growing up through its center.

Who's to say you yourself couldn't take an old square or round job that's been hanging around the attic, saw off part of the legs to lower it, saw out the center, set in a plant, fit some inexpensive mirroring on the top, and paint it whatever color fits your own scheme of things?

BUT let's get back to Rita's living room.

The couches and the over-sized coffee table are in front of a severe modern fireplace of white painted brick which runs the full length of one wall. Books line another wall. Especially notable on a third wall is an arrangement of twenty-five old prints sent Rita by an admirer in Spain, all of them matted and framed in bottle-green lacquered frames.

The contrasting color in this room occurs in two large, armless-owl-twill chairs of bright raspberry. Standing next to them are green lacquered tables with built-in bookcases, and handsome English lamps of black and gold.

The dining room is simple but formal, its Eighteenth Century pieces lacquered in deep green, with the chairs upholstered pure white in a modern fabric. Three of the walls are papered in a handprint scenic panorama, the fourth wall is a mirror.

Why couldn't you do something like that in your own dining room? If you don't want to pay the cost of covering solid walls with panoramic paper, use just enough to trim up the corners, as you will note in the picture of Rita's dining room.

Rita's boudoir suite has gray-blue walls with woodwork and drapery of the same cool shade. A soft, sunny yellow faille makes up the bed-head, bedspread and matching chairs. Definitely not fussy, but functional and comfortable, with a few good modern French pictures hung on the walls. Here again is a hint to the bright home-maker. The bed, that is. What's to hinder pushing together two old twin beds, knocking off the foot and headboards, having an inexpensive wooden headboard made and covering it with the contrasting material of your two-toned spread?

In Rita's boudoir, however, the most important accessory is the telephone system on the lacquered lamp table next to the bed. It connects directly with the nursery suite occupied by Miss Rebecca Welles, so if she should let out a cry during the night, Mommy can immediately find out the cause. Nursery and playroom also feature lacquered furniture in a pale shade of green, with toile chairs and drapery to blend.

For that "favorite" room that every house possesses, its mistress nominates the sitting-and-reading-room adjoining the bedroom suite. Done in grayed turquoise with bright touches of strawberry red, it abounds in comfortable tufted couches and chairs. There's an Eighteenth Century desk and numerous built-in shelves to accommodate piles of books and magazines.

Colorful, comfortable, wholly charming—that's the House of Hayworth!

THE END
I Was There

relaxed on the beach. Our conversation was no tax, certainly. We talked of little else but our sun tans. Gene does a pantomime now of us comparing our darkening shades. We'd lather ourselves with French dressing (equal parts of olive oil and vinegar, which ruined our clothes until we switched to a good sun-tan prep-paration) and bake. We'd go back into the sea the instant we dried off, as salt water possesses marvelous tanning properties.

Yes, Bermuda was restful. And speaking for myself, it also was divine, for Elliott
Reed was there. Soon after our return
Elliott and I announced our engagement.
Gene insists Sonny—which is what everybody calls Elliott—proposed in Bermuda.
Night after night when she and I talk for hours, even those nights when we get in from dates late enough to go straight to sleep, she tries to get me to admit it was the Bermuda moon. When I insist it was after we returned to New York that we became engaged she always says,
"Well, you certainly were working on him down there."

The day we got home—Gene and Sonny and I loved the Island so much we stayed on after Bob Young and Mr. and Mrs.
Bo Bramson (Mrs. Bramson was an old school chum of Gene's) had left—Sonny and I went on to town, hoping to meet friends to whom we could show off our tans. Unfortunately it was midweek and we did not meet a soul we knew.

Gene chose a replica of the dress on the cover to wear to my engagement party.
She had it made in beige. I wore a blue dotted Swiss.

"You stand in the dining room," she told me before the guests arrived. Her dining room is blue. "I'll stand in the living room." Her living room is brown and beige. Mother came in just then in a black and white print. "Mercy!" Gene cried. "I'm afraid, Mother, you'll have to stand in the powder room!" The powder room is in black and white tiles.

I'm sorry, in a way, that I won't be Gene's secretary any more now that I'm being married. I can truthfully say the last year has been fun. However, it's only since both Gene and I have become adult that we got on so well. When we were kids we didn't like each other, at all. Or if we did we didn't know it. And if anyone had prophesied then that I'd have Gene for a matron of honor at my wedding—from choice—I wouldn't have believed it.

I'm A New Woman

Then what happened was that a taxi-driver outside said to Ted, "Know who's inside there? Betty Hutton, the blonde bombshell." Ted got it then. He went to a phone and called me. Two weeks later we were married. I never dreamed of the happiness I was letting myself in for.

In fact, less than a month later I would have said I'd let myself in for a mess of trouble. I wasn't having any fun. I thought Ted was a square because he knew nothing about show business. He thought I was a creep because I called everybody darling. I told him he was intolerant.

It didn't occur to me once that I was the one who was intolerant. I never thought that I was a square because show business was all I could talk about.

I know now that marriage is difficult enough at first for any girl, but it was especially difficult for me. I'd been bossing myself ever since I was eleven and started singing in the streets of Battle Creek, Michigan. I'd shoved and clawed my way up, through vaudeville, night clubs, movie-house shows and contests into pictures. If I'd only married a guy who was content to let me pay all the bills, do all the work, and have my way all the time, it would have been simple.

But Ted didn't think of me as Betty Hutton. He thought of me as his wife. Mrs. Briskin. Running the house for Mr. Briskin. Who paid the bills. And who was the boss and got his way.

We didn't quarrel those first few months, but that wasn't for lack of trying on my part. I got nowhere because Ted would just remain silent. He'd wait until I'd blow my top and then he'd say calmly, "Now, listen, darling." And so help me, I would listen. It was the weirdest sensation.

For I never had listened to anyone before that. I was used to Hutton—and there I began and ended. But as Ted talked I began to get some understanding of the other fellow's viewpoint and emotions.

There was, for example, the matter of Ted's driving me down to the studio mornings and calling for me at the end of the day. We live in Brentwood, a tidy fifteen miles from Paramount. When I'm working I have to leave the house at six a.m. and I'm lucky if I'm back home fourteen hours later. I was used to having that morning drive alone, in order to think over the day's coming scenes. On the drive back I just huddled down behind the wheel in a state of complete mental exhaustion.

Teddy said, "Betty, when you're working, if I don't see you to and from the studio, I'll only see you when you're sleeping. Considering that you'll be on your pictures for two or three months at a stretch, that means we could easily drift apart. I'm not going to let that happen."

"But what about your own work?" I screamed. "Can you fit your hours to mine? Mine are too crazy."

"I've selected a plant site at Santa Monica," Ted said, calmly. "After I deliver you at the studio I can go back there and on my way from it, I can wash up at home, then pick you up."

At first there was nothing else I could do, and I belled. But gradually I began to like it, because it was just so calming. It was something to rely on—not something I had to fight for or about. I was being treated like a woman, even a lady. I was not having to make a noise like a glamorous dynamo.

The next thing I had to straighten out were my friends, my so-called friends. Up until my marriage what I wanted to know was—what you heard from the Hollywood crowd, so I had to have the crowd in to find out. And that way you find out strictly nothing. You tell the latest joke, you retail the latest scandal.

Ted didn’t talk those people’s language. He’s a smart guy. He’s only twenty-eight now but he’s invented a camera that is the talk of the industry.

But at first, the subject bored me and plenty. Then I heard him talking to somebody like Henry Ginsberg, head of my own studio, and I noticed how Ginsberg and others were impressed. I also noticed how the money was rolling in from Ted’s camera sales and similar smart ideas, and it began to dawn on me that there was more in life than worrying over which director I got.

IT’S sharp in show business to use the word “corn” and we tag it onto the sentimental things—Christmas, mother love, sunsets, fidelity. Ted was always doing things I would once have tagged corny. He remembered little anniversaries—and he remembered little gifts as well as big ones.

I’m crazy about robes, for instance, so I’d find myself getting a robe—to celebrate that we’d had married a month—or that we’d had St. Patrick’s day—or that we’d been married two months—or any crazy thing. Then along with that, he’d crack out with something like a new Cadillac for my birthday, or gold jewelry which he knows I dote on.

But what got me were the cards that went with them. Did he write me clever messages? Nope. What he did was go into a drugstore and stand around for a couple of hours, reading over all the cards, getting me just exactly the right sentiment. That’s sure corny—and it melted the heart right out of me to think that anybody would care that much about my happiness.

Then when I knew the baby was coming, I started acting corny and I didn’t care who knew it. Not that so many did—for

- This is what one woman writes of "MY TRUE STORY" Radio Program, brought to you in cooperation with the editors of TRUE STORY Magazine. Others love this greatest of morning shows because it gives them a complete drama every morning, Monday thru Friday. Thousands praise it because it’s true-to-life! Listen—over your American Broadcasting Station—10:00 EST, 9:00 CST, 11:30 MST, 10:30 PST.
Gradually we were getting away from the old group. We live very informally in a one-story house, with a pool out in the back yard and as I discovered listening. I also discovered who were our friends. I learned that if you had cynical people around you became cynical too, and couples who quarreled made you want to quarrel.

And as I quieted down, they began to go. And that was good. For the real friends gathered around then, the people who, like Ted, don’t care about my being Betty Hutton, but like me for myself.

WHEN the baby came, she looked just like Teddy, meaning perfectly beautiful. I named her Lindsay, after Lindsay Durand, who was bridesmaid at my wedding and is my best friend anywhere, but we nickname her “Buttercup.” My mother said, “How can that be our baby? She’s not blonde.” But I’m so glad she has dark hair like her daddy, though she’s gradually beginning to resemble me. Her eyes are absolutely black like Ted’s and she’s personality plus.

She’s crazy about her daddy. He drives back from the plant every day to have lunch with her, and on Sundays when the nurse is off, we take care of her. Teddy puts on old dungarees, gets out a pipe and look; like heck. But Buttercup swings on his pipe and has a wonderful time.

I am so happy she is going to have a little brother or sister about April. I want to have my first two children close together and then we won’t worry about the rest too much—though we want four at least.

I hope Buttercup wants to be an actress when she grows up. I think being in movies is a wonderful life for a girl. You can get mixed up—sure—but you get unscrambled when you meet somebody like my Ted.

You see, I’ve come to appreciate the guy. There’s not a lazy bone in his body, or one frightened thought in his head. He’s always calm and he’s matter-of-fact. I never can respect anybody who isn’t smarter than I am—but he is—so I look up to him.

We go out a lot, because we both like a change of pace. But most of the time we just go by ourselves to over little places, small restaurants with terrific food, or to look at the beach in the moonlight, or the movies and a drive-in. And it’s such fun!

I love our silly little evenings together, Ted’s and mine, but I guess I really appreciate Ted best when we get to a big brawl. For there’s never any question of making me jealous. He’s a family guy, who loves his wife and child.

How square can you be? And how corny? And how utterly wonderful?

Teddy is my present and my future. Being married to him has given me security in my heart. I used to make a picture and worry, “If this picture is bad, how am I going to eat.” Now I’m not afraid. I know whatever happens we’ll be together in it, with Buttercup, and what more do I want—but more Buttercup?

The laugh is, too, that now that I’m relaxed about my career, it’s coming easier and I’m much better. It’s so wonderful to have a home that is so calming and well-regulated, that outside of the studio I never give my work a second thought. Because Teddy taught me to listen and to understand the other fellow’s emotions, I can now sit down and examine a character in a picture and understand it as I never could before. I know I never could have played Georgiana in “Dream Girl!” unless I’d been Mrs. Briskin. Why, heavens to Betty, if this keeps on I may yet become a real actress.

Doesn’t love lead to the darkest—most beautiful things? Real love, I mean?
Many mysterious changes take place in your body as you approach womanhood. For instance, the apocrine glands under your arms begin to secrete daily a type of perspiration you have never known before. This is closely related to physical development and is especially evident in young women. It causes an unpleasant odor on both your person and your clothes.

No need for alarm — There is nothing “wrong” with you. It is just another sign you are now a woman, not a girl. It is also a warning that now you must select a truly effective underarm deodorant.

Two dangers to overcome — Underarm odor is a real handicap at this age when a girl wants to be attractive, and the new cream deodorant Arrid is made especially to overcome this very difficulty. It kills odor instantly, safely and surely, then by antiseptic action prevents the formation of all odor for many hours and keeps you safe. Moreover, it protects against a second danger — perspiration stains. The physical exertion, embarrassment and emotion of the teens and twenties can cause the apocrine glands to freely push perspiration. A dance, a date, an embarrassing remark may easily make you perspire and offend as well as ruin a dress.

All deodorants not alike — Don’t take chances! Rely on Arrid which stops underarm perspiration as well as odor. No other deodorant gives you the same intimate protection as Arrid’s exclusive formula. That’s why Arrid is so popular with girls your age. They buy more Arrid than any other age group. More nurses — more men and women everywhere — use Arrid than any other deodorant.

How to protect yourself — You’ll find the new Arrid a snowy, stainless cream that smooths on and disappears in a jiffy. Never gritty or grainy. The American Institute of Laundering has awarded Arrid its Approval Seal — harmless to fabrics. Gentle, antiseptic Arrid will not irritate skin. No other deodorant tested stops perspiration and odor so completely yet so safely!

Don’t be half-safe — During this “age of courtship,” don’t let perspiration problems spoil your fun. Don’t be half-safe — be Arrid-safe! Use Arrid to be sure. Get Arrid right away, only 39¢ plus tax at your favorite drug counter.

over to the table where I was having dinner with friends, and said, "Are you an actress? You have a spiritual face." He told me to report the next day to the set of 'Major Barbara.' I had no idea what a movie was like. I didn't know whether the camera was behind me or in front of me. I couldn't coordinate the words with the action. Mr. Pascal kept shouting at me, 'You're hopeless.'

"I sobbed, I cried, I vowed I'd never come back," Deborah continued. "But on the fourth day I fin..." (missing text)

DEBORAH was born in Helensburgh, a small village in Scotland. The year, 1921. As a child she never said like so many little girls, "I want to be a dancer." And she rarely went to see movies. "At first I wanted to be a dancer but I grew too tall. (She is five-feet-six-and-a-half-inches in her stockings feet.)

"But, I remember at eleven, I wanted to be a welfare worker for children! That's because a girl at school wanted to do that. A year later I wanted to be a veterinary because I liked dogs. I always had a passion for little things, babies and puppies." Now Deborah is in the seventh heaven of delight because she is expecting her own baby on Christmas Day.

Meantime, Deb knits cute little pin things for the baby. "I want to make enough woolens to keep the baby warm when we go to England in March." The trip is as much to show the child to its grandparents, as for Debbie to star for Metro in their British studio in "Young Bess." "We're going to have two children," she announces with a smile at her husband. "Then we'll stop and think about it." Deb and Tony haven't yet decided a name for the baby. "I wish," says Tony, "that we hadn't called our dog Jason—that would have been a wonderful name for a boy!"

At Metro, Deborah is not yet in the star row of dressing rooms. She will be when they have room. But it doesn't bother her. She is not the kind of girl to worry about where she is. She worries more about what she is. And here is a little story to illustrate that point.

When Deborah started work with Clark Gable in 'The Hucksters,' Gable's stand-in asked for her autograph. Deb, who thinks that anything connected with Gable is out of this world, signed her signature with a grand curlycue flourish. At the end of the picture, Clark presented Deb with a leather script cover with their curlycue signature embossed in gold. She blushed when she saw it. "It's always before me," says Deb, "as a reminder never to be vain again!"

The End
The Wilde Affair

(Continued from page 43) worked in too many pictures in the past three and one-half years. I have been exhausted and temperamental. Patricia has had her troubles. This does not make for happiness. So, I've decided the best thing to do is separate."

The rumors went out bad to bedlam. The Wildes were at Toyan Bay on Catalina Island, supposedly resting for a week before going East to fulfill a summer stock engagement. There they came to their momentous, if not impulsive, decision. Hollywood yachtmen sailed home with the news that over the weekend, Cornel had recklessly sworn out to sea. Two boats, the story goes, were sent out needlessly to rescue him.

Appreciating the depths of his ten-year devotion, it's plausible to believe a man of Cornel's great intensity might resort to such drastic action. It's not probable, however, and for reasons that are more than obvious. Cornel is an intelligent man and too analytical to resort to such an extreme measure to solve a situation. He also happens to be an excellent swimmer.

In those earlier days when he was struggling for recognition, oftimes he'd drive to the beach and swim until physical exhaustion released the pressure of his pent-up emotion. Undoubtedly such were the circumstances in this case. But, his nautical adventure having been preceded by a quarrel (according to the island gossip), then topped by Cornel's announcement—it was only natural for Hollywood to jump to such a conclusion.

JUST a week preceding the Catalina episode, there was that party, jointly given by the Lewis Milestones, the John Hustons, and the Jean Negulescos. All Hollywood was there and all Hollywood enjoyed itself. Pat, looking even more radiant than usual, never missed a dance. Cornel, apprehension lurking in his dark smouldering eyes, wandered about aimlessly and was unable to join in the festivities. Hollywood gossiped about it when notes were compared on the gay evening. Because Hollywood so believed in the solidity of the Wilde marriage, never once was it questioned. Never suspecting there might be repercussions, the whole interlude was dismissed lightly.

When it did happen, the opinions were varied and many as to what caused the Wilde separation. As in all similar situations, one person couldn't be completely responsible. Certainly no one particular action or deed could destroy the love and devotion of two people who have clung together with an almost fierce tenacity. Cornel and Pat naturally knew but were too hurt and concerned to discuss it publicly. Had they appreciated any genuine interest, the sooner it all remains just a memory, the better they'll like it.

Marriage breakups, trial separations, divorces, aren't exactly a novelty in Hollywood. The Wilde affair, however, had such an unusual background that to this writer in particular it represents a challenge—a challenge to one's faith in people and a challenge to one's belief that fairness can win out.

More than any Hollywood couple I have ever known, it has been my belief that Pat and Cornel Wilde could weather any storm—together. Perhaps because I was there with them at the beginning, because I saw and fully appreciated those early struggles. Having witnessed their complete obliteration, shared in a small way some of their anguish and despair, it's hard to believe that anything today could grow so out of all proportion.

Open Letter to Guy and Gail

(Continued from page 67) Slurring of the "s." "Yeah, I do." But instead of taking exception, you merely grin the satisfied grin of a man who knows a good thing when he sees one. And you say, "You're right, Gail. It's plain gold wedding ring you wear. You're proud to wear it because Gal..." but you do not finish. A gentle pressure on your hand causes your eyes to meet her's. Her eyes say, "From This Day Forward..." Those words were the title of a motion picture about the trials of a young couple in love who marry despite the odds against them. Mark Stevens and Joan Fontaine played the married sweethearts, remember, and like other movie fans you two went alone to the picture. It must have impressed you deeply, for your ring Guy, that plain gold wedding band, carries its title in tiny gold carving inside.

And what about your wedding ring, Gail? Oh, yes, you have one too! It fits the top of a pill bottle you keep in your purse. Guy gave you that ring, but so far you haven't worn it in public. It's a gold wedding band too, waiting—for what, Gail? A marriage ceremony ahead? Or does it signify one that's already taken place? You say, "No, no, not a marriage that's taken place!" But when we ask "when—why" you smile as if you were nursing a secret that can't be shared.

Most couples in love seldom stop to analyze why they love each other. What makes yours a one-in-a-million romance is that you two know.

Gail says she loves you, Guy, because she's sincere. She explains that in a town where a single man is expected to date a different belle every night, for the sake of publicity if for no other reason, you never look at another girl.

Now that's exceptional, isn't it? Because your studio might well be anxious that you crash the columns and keep before the public as much as possible, even with Gail's knowledge and understanding. But she's right. You don't like it because you've found the only girl you want to be linked with for the rest of your life? And doesn't that plain gold band on your hand indicate it?

But what's your answer? A sidelong glance, that famous grin and—"She knows doggone well I'm a one-woman man."

NEVERTHELESS, you're not always so indirect; not when you say, "I love her because she has a heart. She cares about people, she's generous, sentimental, and kind and I love it. She's not like some of these girls around here who think only of themselves."

And he's right, Gail. Remember how I admired a purse you carried one day, and then there you emptied its contents into a napkin and handed the bag to me? And how Guy overrode my protest and said, "Don't stop her," he said. "It's all a part of why I love her."

He gets such a kick when you open that fat wallet of yours to reveal pictures, keepsakes, cards—anything that has to do with another's kindness. The card that accompanied the tiny cross sent you as a gift from Carole Landis, and mate of the one Guy wears. And the old snapshots, and a thank-you note from Guy's mother.

"Gail's goodies," Guy calls them, as delighted as if you were a kid. And then he adds, "But nothing of mine in there. You see how I am?"

But there is something of his, of course. Not in the wallet, but in a separate little cloth bag kept always with you and in the bag is the highest award a man out here can really bestow on the girl he loves—a small..."

Portrait in Quicksilver

One room in his studio dressing room suite is ultra-conservative, boasts his two beloved antique lamps with the lapis lazuli bases he bought with the first big money he earned. The inner dressing room is all done up in red-striped wallpaper and strictly Palladian motif. His eight-foot studio bed at home, surrounded as it is by titled furniture, dres a yellow quilted spread. And his collection of valuable Boudin paintings must feel chastened by the cherished cream-colored Ford convertible with the red trim that he drives.

Concerning his more serious side, Cary's perfected the art of worrying along with everything else. He does it very well. Acutely sensitive to the feelings of others, he worries exaggeratedly about any word or act of his that might be misinterpreted and hurt the person involved. He worries about the international chaos in the headlines and will stop reading his morning newspaper because reading it makes him too depressed. He keeps a little black book always with him in which he notes long lists of all the things he's promised to do. A request for a picture or a promise to call somebody the next morning at ten. And he speads from one to two hours daily clearing his book. The guy who never thought he'd hear from him again gets a ring at 9:59, "This is Cary. I said..."

He takes his work even more seriously and worries about a picture from the opening shot until it breaks all box-office records and the rave reviews come in.

Henry Koster, who directed him in the Samuel Goldwyn production, "The Bishop's Wife," and who has great admiration for Grant's "tremendous talent," echoes a common directorial sentiment. "Cary's a thinking man. If you convince him that you're right, you have to prove why, and if you can't show him...then you start all over again," he laughd.

Why he worries so much over minute details, with all of his stature and some thirteen years of successful hits behind him, is a matter of conjecture. It could be a deep feeling of insecurity carried over from his early years of hardships, when he lived on hot dogs and fifty cents a day. Sometimes, in reminiscing about the stilt-walking stanza, he says he used to walk in fear, constantly afraid some hoodlums would run between his legs, knock him down and break his knees, and that he wouldn't be able to find an acting job when the Broadway season opened again in the fall.

Or it could be that he doesn't place enough value on what he's achieved. That he's still reaching for the ultimate...and doesn't realize he's practically up to his dinked chin in it right now.

Cary's versatility has been unanimously acclaimed, what with his underplaying in "Notorious," his brash yet sensitive role in "None but the Lonely Heart," his wild open comedy in "The Bachelor and the Bobby-soxer," to name three.

He's recognized as one of the finest comedians in films, and by many as the greatest romantic artist since Chaplin.

Irving Reis, who directed him in "The Bachelor and the Bobby-soxer," praises Cary's rare gift of timing and facial reactions. "He can express more with one flick of an eyelash than most players can with a page of dialogue," he says. And Myrna Loy, who's starring with him again at RKO in "Mr. Blandings Builds His Dream House," says, "He's the most considerate actor I've worked with."
I was his faultless manners which first impressed his old friend, Don Barclay, a skilled Hollywood caricature artist and actor. Barclay headlined the vaudeville circuit in Las Vegas, in England, in which thirteen-year-old Cary first appeared when he ran away from home to join a troupe of acrobats. Scarred and inexperienced as he was, he stood out from all the others "because he was so polite, such a little gentleman," says Don. Later when Cary came to America he worked as Barclay's straight man in vaudeville and has some of their old bills in a scrapbook at home. They once headlined "DON & CARL" and, in very small print, "assisted by Archie Leach." Cary threatens to have one of them engraved on Don's cigarette case with the added inscription, "This is to remind you . . . of me."

Although he started in show business before completing his education, Cary has given himself a master's degree in philosophy, history, and literature. He's an avid reader, has an inquiring mind and a photographic memory. He has a deep appreciation and understanding of music and the fine arts, is a fair pianist himself. He has a valuable art collection including a Utrillo and some carefully chosen English sporting prints which are hung in the dark-paneled library of his Bel-Air home.

Most people—who those who don't see him when he worries—know Grant as the gayest guy in all Hollywood. For there are many days when he rides on top of the world, fairly pushing it along.

This is the Cary who's always giving studio personnel work. The Cary who forgets his house key and greets his English housekeeper who opens the door for him with a bland, "Trick or treat?"

Who gets a bang out of confusing the crew on the set of "The Bishop's Wife" with a mind-reading act he's worked out with Loretta Young.

Hollywood hostesses agree that Cary is a gay and gracious person, who always enters enthusiastically into the spirit of any evening, whether it involves serious conversation, showing a movie or a home musical.

On the latter occasion he can't resist jokey remarks such as, "Waiting on the set can be a pious team. He gives out with his full repertoire of Cockney songs and sings duets with his good pal, Rosalind Russell, usually their own corny, if stirring rendition of "Good-

Lines on Lon

Afterwards there was a walk on the sand, an impulsive choice of a movie, a stop in a drive-in for juicy hamburgers and coffee and more talk about their latest discoveries about life. Time steals by until, parked in front of Ann's apartment, she'll self-accusingly gasp, "It's late, Lon! Now good night. I've got to get some sleep!" Being a night owl who's never had a guilty twinge about enjoying after-midnight hours most, he is given to retorting, "You mean it's so early now!"

Ask Lon McCallister about girls in general, and Ann specifically, and he will tell you they have a great deal in common. But, he adds frankly, "We're not in love. I've never been in love yet. I've concentrated on getting a start in the movies, and on acquiring as good an education as possible."

Lon and Ann aren't the night-club type, so they met, ironically enough, at Ciro's. The occasion was a press party both had to attend. The only vacant chair Lon could find was at Ann's table. Already a distant admirer of her looks and acting ability, he was intrigued by her off-screen personality. Her reaction was similar.

Lon is a native of modern Los Angeles and college educated. His youthful face got him cast as a high-school senior on his return from war. He's never been on a farm. But now in "Bob, Son of Battle," he's convincing as a high-tempered sheepherder, tossing in an authentic Scottish accent and playing a violin besides. Next in "Summer Lightning" he'll be rural again.

Ann, in turn, has scored on the screen as a wilful girl causing plenty of trouble. That she's made her dent by being the dramatically defiant sort is ironic. Literally she's an unusually nice girl with no vices, gifted at portraying characters whose motivation she must mentally and emotionally estimate.

They like to walk down Hollywood Boulevard and since they happen to live only a block apart and three blocks above the Boulevard, they do this when they haven't time to take off for the beach. They are rarely recognized because Lon looks like any college boy and Ann also has a campus air. "She doesn't want people to see me as a boy, but I can afford them. I want investments that'll tide over any lack of work in the future. I intend to provide for my family. After I break up with her, I'll find a job. Mother will have this building and the income from it.

"I don't attempt to prove I'm like I am in the movies. I sometimes am—and in many ways I'm not. If a girl's going to do anything for me, she might as well take it on the chin fast and look elsewhere. I assume traits foreign to myself only when a role calls for them."

ANN definitely is one of Lon's favorite people—even though he dates other girls too; Cathie Downs, Nancy Walker, Allene Roberts and Peggy Ann Garner, so far as "names" go. And any day now, Zeta Lind- don, who's hot now. Now that you're in Hollywood for a long-anticipated visit.

"Etha had a small part in the U.S.O.'s production of 'What a Life!' and when that troupe came to Alaska I was assigned and Adam Arkin did Wally for the troops in Anchorage, Fairbanks and Nome. I'll never forget the laughs Etha and I had over hot cakes in the Log Cabin in Fairbanks. On the afternoon we went swimming in an Alaskan lake.

Lon looked her up in New York City, where her home is, when his studio sent him East last winter. She was every bit as gay and bright and terriffed her. He proudly took her to a lavish film premiere, introducing her to Tyrone Power, Maureen O'Hara and the other Hollywood people there for it. "I had to wear a tux, and clothes costaged the play," Lon says with a smile, "and we reveled in our temporary finery."

Lon's new apartment house looks down a hillside onto the exact center of Hollywood. He's using part of his first movie earnings, because it nearly tripled in value in four years and, being a shrewd business man, he couldn't ignore that.

He lives on the top floor himself with his mother and grandparents. "I'm not too tied to my folks," he insists. "I'd rather live alone now, but I can't afford it yet. Happier times and the slowly arriving good times, and we love each other."

"We climb these sixty-six steps feeling mighty lucky we have them to puff up." He sits there permanently, and that long ago they resolved that whichever of them hit the big time first would treat the other to such a spree. Since Lon got to New York a number of times while in Hollywood he's decided not to show Ray. In their three weeks' stay they missed practically nothing. By the time the two flew home they were anxious to just lie on the beach and enjoy a ray of sunshine."

"I'm not even thinking of marriage yet," Lon says. "I want to feel more mature before I fall in love, because I won't take a wife lightly. I think divorce is a failure of the marriage, and that long ago they resolved that whichever of them hit the big time first would treat the other to such a spree. Since Lon got to New York a number of times while in Hollywood he's decided not to show Ray. In their three weeks' stay they missed practically nothing. By the time the two flew home they were anxious to just lie on the beach and enjoy a ray of sunshine."

THE END
Time out for Laughter
the company which will produce "Joan of Arc." A co-owner, J., has a great deal more to say about the story, casting and sets than she knew there would have had if Selznick had produced the film.

Ingrid knows too, that as a producer she will have to work twice as hard as she did when she was only an actress. But of one thing you may be sure—whatever the problems, she will tackle them with the same joyousness she has displayed when confronted by problems in the past. Ingrid makes people laugh and loves her laughter—good, round, spontaneous laughter. One can't help falling in love with her. But she can tell apart easy laughter and doesn't spring from false cracks or easy jobs. Each time she laughs you discover a new Ingrid.

She has never been quite able to understand the laughter of some of the crowds which crush about a movie actor or actress, and literally pluck at their clothing. "Why," she says, "they're just people doing their jobs. I cannot imagine the Bobby-soxers or the movie goer as a maker of fine watches or a master craftsman in any line of endeavor."

But much as she may chuckle at Hollywood's vagaries, she can laugh heartily and long at herself.

ON THE set when the work is not going smoothly, when small annoyances creep in and everybody, the director can always depend on Miss Bergman to ease the situation through her unfailing and sometimes clownish sense of humor. On the set of "Spellbound," for instance, she had been having difficulty learning to pronounce the tongue-twisting medical words required in her role.

She confided her difficulty to Director Alfred Hitchcock, who assured her that she had nothing to worry about. He would personally give her a little drill before each scene in which she was to use them. He would spell the word to her in syllables. He chose psychokinesia as a subject for the drill: "A breeze稽—ki—ness稽—si稽—fer稽—bergman."

"Si—ki—ki—ness稽—si稽—fer稽—bergman."

"Si—ki稽—ken稽—sa稽—bergman."

"Si稽—ki稽—fer稽—bergman!"

"Si稽—ki稽—ken稽—sa稽—bergman.

Over and over they tried, with Bergman becoming more destitute by the minute. Hitchcock was growing discouraged, too.

"Nuts," he said finally, in despair. Bergman beamed. "That one," she said, "I can already say."

Another time, during the filming of "The Bells of St. Mary's," Ingrid, playing the role of a nun, was required to kneel before an altar. It was a touchingly poignant scene and certainly offered no opportunities for laughter even though those of the order, Leo McCarey and Bing Crosby, were present. Ingrid played her part beautifully and delicately before an audience of nearly a hundred studio people who sat in the gallery as reverently as though they were really attending a celebration of the Mass. When the scene was finished, Ingrid arose, still holding the spectators' drama-drenched hearts, took actress's heart, and with utter gravity, passed the collection plate. Still bemedused by the intensity of the passage of the story which they had just witnessed portrayed with such exquisite artistry, grips, technicians and executives dropped half dollar coins and bills into the plate and didn't wake up until they saw Miss Bergman swaying with laughter.

Incidentally Reverend Father Devlin, technical adviser on the picture and pastor...

Famed for his ability to recognize a player with a future almost at first glance, Selznick puts them under contract and then begins renting them to other studios at a sum which means a substantial profit to himself. The figures are closely guarded, but it is generally supposed that Selznick made one hundred thousand dollars on each deal, with other studios for Ingrid's rental. Her price naturally went up after she won the Academy Award.

Ingrid's husband, Dr. Peter Lindstrom, exceptionally on being appointed to being a brain surgeon, believes the Hollywood custom of renting out stars at fancy figures while paying them a comparatively small sum, is a bad one.

This is not the case. Ingrid didn't resign with Mr. Selznick. "Arch of Triumph" is her first picture in the free lance field; "Joan of Lorraine" her second.

Although Ingrid accepts the necessity for compromising at times, on one issue she is adamant. Her home life must be her own. Her career, important though it is to her, must never be allowed to embarrass her physician husband.

Ingrid loves music and continually sketching new plans for a home of her own. Always, these show the modern influence and plastic is used in many forms. Glass is interpreted in numerous ways—of the latest being some hand-painted place mats which she designed for her birthday party, on which she painted designs with her daughter Pia's water colors, to represent the careers and interests of their ten family members.

No Bergman house plan is complete without a swimming pool, for each morning, despite early rain or raw weather, the blonde star swims. Her swim suits invariably are cut blue. And, when sun and shooting schedules permit, she naps for a little while beside the pool, the skin of her shoulder blades vividly white against the blue of her scant suit.

Her fond one of her favorite dish is ice cream. One of her best-known habits is that of leaving an order at the studio commissary for ice cream to be served the cast and crew at four p.m. every day that she is there.

Ingrid is a great reader, a fast reader, and makes a habit when she is working on a picture made from a great novel, of carrying copies of the book with her, as well as the script and novels on marked passages with footnotes in her own handwriting, which she believes are helpful in bringing the character to life on the screen.

Every day—every moment of Ingrid Bergman's life, it seems to present for her a different role. And, strangely enough, in Hollywood town where "typing" is the rule, not the exception, she has never repeated a characterization.

Always, however, whatever she is doing and irrespective of how hard she may be working, Ingrid Bergman takes time out for laughter. The same infectious laughter that with which she came over her first hurdles in Hollywood. Laughter, to Ingrid, is as essential as the air she breathes.

One of her most regular correspondents is a taxi driver in New York. "I like him because he has a fresh outlook on life," she says. "And because he likes to laugh. It is good to laugh."

The End
Fashion Reflections

(Continued from page 66) shaped, cut very low, strapless and, of course, “wired for sound,” but I’ve yet to see her in a too-long street dress, or one of those chopped off four-inches-from-the-floor gowns.

A

other strong hold-out for sweep-the-floor gowns is Van Heflin’s wife, Frances c, who looked stunning the night of the big party for Walter Winchell at Mocambo, in a white-toppe d, a black skirt literally trailing the floor. Ava Gardner has a breath-taking gown that Irene designed of heavy slipper satin in emerald green. It combines much of the new influence in clothing styles, lengths and charm of the “old.” The Edwardian influence is seen in the draped hip-line.

Sleek-lined bodice, off-the-shoulder neckline and white dress, prove again that nothing can top the elegance of good lines and simplicity.

And speaking of parties, none of the gal at the big party that Lana Turner and Ty Power gave (Ty took off on his flying trip to Africa) looked any prettier in “the latest” than did Joan Bennett. She was wearing her “Command Performance” dress—one she wore when she presented to England’s King and Queen last spring. A beautiful, floor-length bouffant of powder-blue net, splattered with tiny sequins, tiny waisted and decolletted Joan was sporting a dia-mound necklace too.

Cathy O’Donnell has two daytime dresses worth noting for their simplicity. One is a green wool princess style with gold buttons down the front. Matching Peter Pan collar and no belt. The other is a casual dress that features unpressed pleats and a belt of black shirred crepe.

June Allyson is a black wool jersey and plaid dress that makes a bright flash under fur coats these days. The skirt is red, blue, green, black and white plaid.
The black top is perked up with tiny white buttons, besides its small matching plaid collar and cuffs.

Gadgets and gimmicks: Patricia Morris-son is the only gal in Hollywood who has table lamps she once wore on her feet!
When she was at the Dallas Centennial in Dallas, the committee gifted Pat with a pair of boots made of solid silver. She wore them for press photos and then had them converted into lamp-bases for her living room.

Walter Florell designed a black lace and lucite picture hat for Lynn Bari. It sounds a little fantastic but it came out on the enthusiastic model’s head. Her charming little tiny antique gold snuffbox with a tiny diamond crest on it, but all she carries in it are a couple of aspersions. She used to keep her saucer in it when she was drinking, but that’s- over and done with Pettigirl proportions now.

In jewelry it’s just about everything from Joan Crawford’s choker of five-carat baguettes with an undesirable hunk of stuff at the center-out. Ava Colby’s exquisite antique jeweled lace with matching earrings of baroque to and small diamonds set in gold.

And there’s the hat on which Sonja
Helen must have spent half the profits from her last ice show, when she was in Paris. She wore it to the swanky and beautiful people of Paris. But when she went to Hollywood the night it opened—the restaurant, not the hat! Sonja was with her new beau Greg Bautz and she was crowned with a stunning black velvet circle, from which sprays of black crystal pour forth in all directions. Remember when we tipped you months ago that drop earrings would be the rage by now? Lana Turner loves ‘em.

NAME.

ADDRESS.
So does Claudette Colbert. And we must speak more of Claudette. La Colbert has been wearing that short fluffy bob of hers for years y'know, and as your mother says, "If you hang on to something long enough it always comes back in style." Well, the gals around Hollywood are shearing off their locks like mad again—not cropped—but almost to a feather bob in length and style. Mrs. MacLean is busy having them manufactured for the whole-sale market and you'll be able to buy one yourself soon.

The skirt is of black quilted glazed chintz, which is reversible and is white on the inside. It hangs to twelve inches from the floor, is circular and very full—all the way around the bottom, but slim at the hips and waist, the waist-bands being one inch wide. There is a large front pocket because of the quilting that when it's off it stands up by itself on the floor! I've seen Colby wear it for daytime with a pale blue jersey, short-sleeved shirt tucked in. And here is a skirt that it wear to dinner parties with a lovely black chiffon "shirtwaist" and lots of jewelry. I've seen it on Lana who wore it to a cocktail party, topped by a black jersey high-necked but dressy sweater, with about seven strands of pearls at her throat and diamond and pearl drop earrings. Come spring or summer and this knockout "invention" can serve too with peony blouses, with softly netted tops of any kind for cocktail or dancing parties. Just no end to its uses—and it's simply knockout for making entrances—it's so darned perky and flattering to legs—and waistline. Go to it, kids! The END

HEADACHE RELIEF COMES FAST WITH NEW “BC” TABLETS

"So does scum," said Charlie.

At approximately this time, or it might have been a few nights later at some other party, I said to my Beautiful Wife, "I must be drunk, but that looks like Rudy Vallee singing with that dance band."

"You're drunk all right," my B.W. said, "but it IS Rudy Vallee."

"I'm going to stay anyway," I said.

We had other magnificent entertainment such as Jack Benny sawing his violin, Kay Kyser making jokes, Eddie Bracken doing his baseball bit, Ginny Simms and Frances Langford doing a wonderful duel, and one of the columnists doing his specialty (slapping himself on the back).

MY B.W. went to the ladies' room and wandered into a room where she found thirteen 1934 Atwater Kent radios that had never been opened. She turned one of the radios on and got the Two Black Crows.

Atwater Kent is one of Hollywood's finest old felsas and is rapidly becoming legendary, which is a pretty high-toned word for a piece like this. Anyway, this legend says he always says "Charming" to everybody no matter what they're talking about which is supposed to be absent-mindedness.

One time one of his guests apologized to him for not having been present at recent parties, explaining that her mother had died.

"Charming," said Mr. Kent.

As I say this is a legend, but when I spoke to him he didn't say "Charming" to me—or could this be because I ain't?

Still, if Hollywood people like to fling their dough around, I'm glad to have them make some of it stick on me.

Of course there are the small teeny-weeny Hollywood parties too, at which hardly more than twenty-five guests are invited. Usually only eighty people can make it. (Yes, honey, there are crashers out here.) Sonja Henie, at her parties, takes a pugnacit position at the door and chase away the people she hasn't invited.

One night I went to a party in honor of the Howard Lindsays of "Life with Father" fame. It was given by Armand Deutsch and his B.W., Benay Venuta.

"Bring a present," I was told by Mrs. Frank Loesser.

"What?" I said.

"Something they couldn't possibly use."

Are you in the know?

Do this if you'd try —

- Cartooning
- A different hairstyling
- A new parlor game

Is your face round or square ... long or oval? Do you really know? Before trying a different hairstyle—put tracing paper over your photograph, then outline your face. It tells you your true type, so you can plan your coiffure accordingly! Experts say that's important. Same as it's important (on problem days) to know your type of sanitary napkin. That's easy, with Kotex. Just try all 3 sizes of Kotex: you'll find the one that's very personally yours.

Feel neglected at a no-date party?

- Crawl into a corner
- Start a conversation
- Choose the nearest exit

At a strictly stag-and-doe shindig, maybe you haven't snared a partner. So— you're crushed! To banish "wallflower panic" just stroll up to that boogie man at the keyboard . . . start a conversation. It'll be a duet! Self-assurance wouldn't forsake you if you'd learn to meet trying situations confidently. Take trying days, for instance. You'd be poised—feel secure—with Kotex and the extra protection of that exclusive safety center. Kotex keeps you fluster-proof!

What's the latest "dorm" doings?

- Snack smuggling
- Snicker smuggling
- Briefing-sessions

Even "dorm" life can be beautiful! Main idea's to be comfortable, though, say campus queens. They're the gals who know that for comfort on difficult days there's nothing quite like the softness of Kotex: the napkin made to stay soft while you wear it. They're the same, comfort-loving gals who are "briefing" their bathrobes . . . chopping 'em off, for more freedom. Or sporting the dreamy, poetic Study Coat pictured here. Either way, brief's the word!

3 guesses what girls forget most!

- Keep daintiness with deodorants
- Practice good posture
- Buy a new sanitary belt

Of course you're careful about daintiness, you say. And you keep posture-perfect, too. But isn't there one thing you've overlooked? Namely, to buy a new sanitary belt? Yes, because most girls forget . . . keep putting it off "till next time." To get all the comfort your napkin gives, now's the time to buy a new Kotex Sanitary Belt!

Fact is—the Kotex Belt is made to lie flat, without twisting or curling. So a Kotex Belt fits snugly; comfortably. It's adjustable . . . all elastic . . . doesn't bind when you bend!

Who should follow the head waiter?

- The girls
- The boys
- One couple

When a head waiter beckons, it's no time to be confused. Confidence is such a help . . . like being sure that the girls should follow first. The eyes of patrons are upon you! Then's when (at certain times) you bless Kotex for those flat pressed ends that reveal no outlines. You're sure you're smooth. And at ease, with the comfort of your new Kotex Sanitary Belt that fits snugly; doesn't bind . . . that's adjustable; all-elastic!

More women choose KOTEX® than all other sanitary napkins

What Should I Do?

YOUR PROBLEMS ANSWERED

DEAR Miss Colbert:

I am nineteen and deeply in love with a fellow of twenty-five. We are planning to be married soon. When I first started to go with him, he told me that he had been married when he was twenty, but had been divorced for almost three years. He talked about his first marriage very frankly with me.

Now he and I think exactly alike. We both enjoy sports, and think that trust and partnership are the best foundations for marriage. We want to build a house, starting with one room on a GI loan. I want to keep my job until we start our family in about five years.

When I finally told my mother that Bill was a divorced man, she said flatly that I could never marry him with her blessing. She said, "There are enough nice single boys in this world without your causing gossip by marrying a divorced man."

I am crazy about Bill and want to marry him. But, I don't want to do anything to make my mother and father unhappy.

Please tell me how to make them see that it isn't Bill's past that counts, it is his future—with me.

Penny B.

In your case, I would say that you are still young enough to allow your love for Bill to be tested by time. Why not wait another year before setting your wedding date? The wise girl prolongs her courtship days until she is quite certain that her respect and love are great enough to last a lifetime.

Something about your letter impels me to the belief that your mother is using Bill's previous marriage as an excuse to cover some other objection. Why don't you ask Bill to have a talk with your parents. If he will outline his previous marriage and divorce to them as sensibly as he has to you, I think he will be able to persuade them that he has profited from a bitter experience and that he is now a better human being and will become a better husband as a result.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a bride of ten months. I met my husband in 1942. We were living in the same apartment building and were introduced by the manager. With me it was love at first sight. After I caught on to his routine I would "happen" to be around when he came home. I would "happen" to be cooking dinner and would invite him to come in to share it. Sometimes he would tap at my door when he came in around ten o'clock in the evening and we would have a glass of milk together.

From the time I met him until he was called into the Army in 1943, we had only one formal date.

When he went into the Army I didn't see him for two years. Although I wrote regularly, he would write only once in three or four months. Yet, when he was given a furlough, he came straight to see me, said he had missed me and our evenings together and asked me to wait for him. We were married in late 1946.

I quit my job two weeks before we were married and he has been after me ever since to go back to work. He says that two people can never get on in the world unless both buckle down and stay busy. He is continuing his studies at night and works during the day, so we really don't have much married life. He is nice and courteous to me, but somehow I don't feel that he adores me. We are more like good friends occupying the same apartment.

Do you think I should go back to work? Can you think of some way to make my husband fall in love with me—really in love?

Anapola

You realize in your own heart, of course, that you pursued this man. That seldom pays.

A man likes to do his own hunting. There are subtle ways in which a girl can encourage a man, but inviting him to her apartment repeatedly is too plain a following of the old adage about the way to a man's heart.

I have a feeling that your husband has never really noticed you as a woman. He probably thinks of you as a contemporary combination mother-sister who provides him with the comforts of home.

Definitely, you should go back to work. You should also enroll for some sort of evening class so that you will be as busy as your husband. Match his moods (unless he is irritable), try to live so deeply within yourself and your own thoughts that you become somewhat mysterious.

Buy a few becoming new clothes and wear them without calling his attention to them. Make yourself more interesting and more independent, and I believe that—since your marriage is so new—you may be able to duplicate the old novel title, "He Fell in Love with His Wife."

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

I am a man of seventeen with a serious problem. While I was visiting my aunt in Chicago this summer, I met a wonderful girl who was visiting the people next door.

We spent the summer together, and had a swell time. She is a wonderful girl of sixteen and she is solid. She has always lived in California.

She is back in school out west now, and we have been corresponding.

Since I am at home, I am not satisfied with anything. I am also back at school, but I am not getting good grades. All the girls seem quite squares and at home things are really rough. My father drinks and he doesn't get along with my mother and me.

I have half a notion to quit school, run away to California and get married. I don't know what to do, but I don't want to continue going to school and living in this mad house.

Harry L.

Being seventeen is a difficult responsibility. You are no longer a child, nor are you yet an adult. I receive many letters from girls of seventeen who ponder the relative merits of continuing with their education or getting married.

However, you are the first boy to place the question.

That query leads me to believe that you have no very clear idea of the seriousness of marriage—particularly from a man's standpoint. How would you support a wife? For a time you might be able (Continued on page 6)

A Medal for "Mr. DeLong"

Dear Miss Colbert:

I have two children by a former marriage. My present husband doesn’t care for these children. He says he loves me with all his heart, which I believe he does, and I love him deeply.

We had been married only a few months when we separated because of the children. Not because of anything really wrong that they did, but disagreements about what they should eat, how they were to be disciplined, taught, etc.

When we were apart, I was miserable and my husband said he was too. He said we could start again in marriage only if I would take my children over to their daddy’s mother to be reared. (She wanted them.) Now that we’re back together again, I miss my children terribly. I’m just so mixed up I don’t know which way to turn. Is it wrong for a woman to give up her children for the man she loves?

(Mrs.) Leonard T.

You have answered your own question: You don’t feel right in your heart about having given your children to their grandmother to bring up, and you know that I can’t persuade you. However, if I think there is help to be had in this situation. Your husband probably loves you very much, and instinctively resents the children because he fears that your love for them diminishes your love for him.

This is a primitive attitude. A woman loves her children one way, her parents in another, and her mate in yet a different way, and every thinking person must—敬 for his own peace of mind—use those facts.

I think that, if some wise person (a social worker, a clergyman, a teacher) could talk to your husband, explaining some of the simple facts of psychology, he could be persuaded to be happy with you and your children.

If your husband could be made to see that, by including the children in your home, he was not losing a part of your love, but actually was gaining theirs, I think his behavior would change and the four of you could have a well-balanced family life. At least it is worth trying.

Claudette Colbert

Dear Miss Colbert:

My husband and I have been married four years and have two children.

I married at eighteen, my husband was twenty-one and in the service.

Our first daughter was born while my husband was away and he, for that reason, did not supervise her early training, or even get to know her until she was two years old. Lee Anne is a sensitive, nervous child who needs a lot of care and loving, yet he does not understand, nor try to understand her.

My husband and I have similar temperaments, and we argue over nothing at all. For one thing we are continually on edge because of Lee Anne. She cries so very much. We’ve tried every method of correction—even spanking which was advised by others—but nothing seems to turn her into a good, sunny child.

Can you find any solution for me?

Adele T. H.

For two wonderful years your daughter’s world consisted only of herself and you. All babies are little royalty who regard themselves as the center of the universe. In Lee Anne’s case, a strange man—and he was strange even if he happened to be the father—had to demand her mother’s attention. So, in order to gain attention, she became frictions and difficult to handle.

You and your husband should have been wise enough to anticipate and to understand this. Lee Anne should have been made to feel that her daddy loved her, not that he—quite like another child—was jealous of her. And, while Lee Anne was still bewildered about losing half of her mother to a father, along came another baby to take up even more of your time.

In addition to this, I would imagine that the atmosphere of your home—since you and your husband have been having temperamental troubles—has not been conducive to a feeling of security for the child. She shouldn’t be spanked. That will only increase your trouble.

If it is at all possible, you and your husband should see a child welfare expert together. The better, because you have the beginning of a serious maladjustment in your home.

On a mild September day in 1877 in the city of London, England, Santa Claus was born. At the time no one who saw little Edmund Gwenn dreamed that he would turn out to be Kris Kringle. For who could have guessed that seventy years later a new-fangled entertainment known as motion pictures would produce a story called "The Miracle on 34th Street" in which Teddy, a seasoned actor by this time, would play Santa?

The Gwenn trek toward that goal began when Edmund was seventeen. In a stormy session with his father, who expected his son to follow in his British Civil Service career, Edmund made it clear he preferred the stage. Whereupon, disowned, he set out on his own. For ten years he struggled. Then George Bernard Shaw, who had admired him in an obscure one-act play in London, offered him the role of a chauffeur in his play, "Man and Superman." Roles in five more Shaw plays followed, and suddenly he was a celebrity and a mighty fine actor to boot.

During World War I, in which he ranked as a Captain, he returned to London where he aided a young juvenile called Ronald Colman in his first play. British movies, twenty-one in all, came next. And when he returned to the theater in "Laburnum Grove," Hollywood grabbed him right off the stage for a role in "The Bishop Misbehaves." Since then, except for a return trip to his native England for "A Yank at Oxford," his professional efforts have been concerned with Hollywood movies and the Broadway stage.

To all Hollywood Teddy Gwenn is a beloved and respected figure. His life begins and ends with his work and, since he has no family ties, his heart belongs, rightly, to acting.

When the role of Kris Kringle was offered to Teddy, he went first to his M-G-M bosses for permission. They had nothing on immediate schedule for him so after "Green Dolphin Street" he went over to Twentieth Century-Fox to make picture history in "The Miracle on 34th Street."

During the shooting of "Green Dolphin Street" Teddy had not been feeling well but, like the good trouper he is, insisted on going straight into "The Miracle..." rather than hold up production. He held on until the picture was finished, then went into the hospital where experimental injections were administered every three hours. It was during this time that the studio discovered a few additional lines were needed from Santa. They rigged up the sound equipment outside Teddy's window and between injections he spoke the additional lines.

"Thunder in the Valley" was next on his schedule. It went into production before he had his operation. However, he thrived so in the rugged atmosphere that the nurse assigned to go on location with him returned to Hollywood.

And when this picture was completed, alone with his chauffeur, he drove to Ann Arbor for an operation that soon had him spryly flitting about the M-G-M studios in his role of the Scottish doctor in "Hills of Home."

For eleven years Teddy made his home at the Beverly Wilshire Hotel, but when he returned from the run of a New York stage play to find himself homeless, he and a friend moved into a house in Beverly Hills.

Kindness and good humor, gentleness, a deep sincerity—these are the attributes that make Teddy Gwenn beloved in Hollywood. Like Santa Claus he carries the spirit of Christmas in his heart all year 'round.

Important social event: Lana Turner's party for Tyrone Power

All the girls received orchids! Clark Gable brought favorite date Dolly O'Brien

Aloha to Ty: The invitation, signed jointly by Lana and Tyrone, requested Cal's presence at a farewell-to-his-friends party in the beautiful Champagne Room of Mocambo, and never to Hollywood's knowledge has there been such a beautiful and lavish affair. Tons of miniature orchids, flown in from Honolulu, clung to the mirrored walls, hung from crystal chandeliers and draped each table and lady guest. Lights from Hollywood below twinkled and glowed through the windowed wall while violins, twelve of them, thrilled the stars who filled the room.

Bob Hope with his pretty wife came over to tell us how much he enjoyed South America. "It was the kids' trip," he laughed. "They were the stars wherever we went." Clark Gable, with the charming and lovely Dolly O'Brien Dorelis, told Cal how nice it was to be working with Lana in "Homecoming." And as always, Cal had many a laugh with the witty Clifton Webb.

Van Johnson, who got in at two that morning from a personal appearance tour, was pleased with the results, he told us. All doubts of his popularity seemed dispelled. Evie, looking well, was with him.

Darryl and Virginia Zanuck, the Gary Coopers, the Louis Jourdans and the Reggie Gardiners were among the last to say farewell and to thank Lana, looking a dream, and Tyrone for the best party to date.

"Homecoming" so she can join Tyrone Power on his return flight and go back to Hollywood with him in his private plane . . . Guy Madison and Gail Russell are together again after a minor spat . . . Judy Garland, dispelling all those illness rumors, reported back to the studio and is hard at work recording her songs and rehearsing her dance numbers for "Easter Parade." Talk still is, however, that Betty Garrett (Mrs. Larry Parks) will have the Garland role in "Annie Get Your Gun" as soon as she finishes "Big City" . . . Betty Hutton is not building a nursery addition onto her rambling low bungalow home for the new baby. Betty is going to fulfill a childhood yearning for a two-story colonial house. She always felt it was so elegant to have the children "go upstairs"—more homelike too . . . Don't believe the rumors that Marie McDonald will retire from the screen. Now that she's become Mrs. Harry Kari, she will divide her time between home and screen . . . Billy DeWolfe is getting more fan mail than any other male on the Paramount lot. Most of the fans ask him to create a Mr. Murgatroyd and now that he is back from his personal appearances with "Variety Girl" he's hard at work. The routine will be built around a Milque-toast character who drives Mrs. Murgatroyd to drink.

It's the Little Things: Ronald Reagan admits to a quick, hot, doorslamming temper that wears off in less than a day . . . Seldom talks about it. He doesn't like gushy praise either. . . . Gary Cooper has a shy little half smile off screen as well as on. And talks very little . . . Bette Davis is superstitious about rain and believes all good things happen to her during a downpour . . . Bob Taylor likes to get out of Hollywood between pictures and fish and hunt. He doesn't give a fig about parties . . . Glenn Ford has a slow drawl in his off-screen conversation and usually says "Gee whiz" at the end of a sentence . . . Deanna Durbin has had a will of iron since childhood, which lends her considerable force and provides some unhappy moments, too.

Farley Granger, one of the most personable young lads in town, is bespeaking Ann Blyth, who plays middle-aged Charles Boyer's wife in "Mortal Coils" of all things . . . Barbara Stanwyck likes to eat dinner at the drugstore counter at Schwab's new Beverly Hills pharmacy . . . Dorothy McGuire, bless her, gets herself up like a scarecrow in "Wizard of Oz" and seems to enjoy it . . . Set of the Month: Unbelievable is the only word that can describe the get-up and the characterization of Edgar Bergen as a mortician of the pre-gay nineties. On the "I Remember Mama" set, we were fascinated with Edgar's performance as he sat on a park bench talking to his wife, played so well by Ellen Croby. There was no Charlie McCarthy to steal scenes or distract attention.

Producer Harriet Parsons came over to chuckle with us as the scene unfolded in the lovely park, built in a corner of the stage. A group of picknickers and children, all in costume, nonchalantly played about while the dialogue went on. Philip Dorn, who plays Irene Dunne's husband, stood by, also amused.

Director George Stevens discussed scenes between each take and if what we saw is a sample, everyone will remember Mama for a long, long time.

Writer Goes Actor: Tom D'Andrea, as a writer at Warners, wrote some very funny dialogue for the film "Pride of the Marines" and then, as you remember, delivered the lines himself. Thus Tom, who plays straight to Errol Flynn in "Silver River," advanced from radio writing to presenting service shows he organized and wrote himself as an Air Force Sergeant, and on to studio writing and finally acting. See how it's done?

His first screen appearance was in "This Is the Army." From there he went into "Night and Day," "Never Say Goodbye," "Two Guys from Milwaukee," "Humoresque" and "Dark Passage."

Tom, in his thirties, is a handsome guy, with just a few silver hairs over the temple, wears good looking suits, is unmarried, is now more actor than

The Kayes "Okay"? By the time this reaches print, it is an even-money bet that the Danny Kayes will be back together. The seventh year of any marriage is traditionally the hardest. In Hollywood the belief is that, since they have not both been famous, the Kayes would have taken a short vacation from marriage and the dangerous seventh year would have passed without damage. Because their private lives made headlines, the split is wider. Sylvia has a Warner contract to work on all Danny's pictures, and the bets are that they will have settled all their differences before the new contract starts. Even after Danny moved into the Sunset Towers in September, they continued to see each other almost daily. Separation seems to be teaching these two intense, hard-working people that they're more dependent on each other than they ever realized. Sylvia is maternal, protective and gen-

(Continued from page 16) Enr. Her talent for giddy writing found its complement in Danny's zany delivery. Danny is sensitive, high-strung, shy. He gives more affection than most and needs more than most. As their talents complement each other, so do their characters.

One of the things that has given Danny the most hurt is the implication of ingratitude to his wife and Samuel Goldwyn. He always had made it a point, in public and in private, of the importance of Sylvia's contribution to his career, and continuing evidence of his gratitude and regard for it is the separate contract he was instrumental in negotiating for her at Warner Brothers. It is equally unfair to accuse him of ingratitude to Goldwyn who brought him to the screen. It should be remembered that Danny was making $12,500 a week on the stage in a personal appearance at the Roxy when both Goldwyn and Warners offered him movie contracts. He chose to sign with Goldwyn because he felt that it was wiser at the beginning of his career to have the personal attention of that great producer who concentrates his time and that of his whole studio on one production at a time. Many stars change studios without accusation of ingratitude. There is no reason for Danny to be criticized because he has signed a contract that gives him wider choice of story, director and cast.

He Does It Again: "They want me for 'The Hucksters,'" Sydney Greenstreet told Cal several months ago. "What do you think?" What we thought consumed the rest of the evening, for if ever there was a perfect bit of casting, Sydney in the role of the soap tycoon was it. When we met again after his first day of shooting he was a little uneasy at having accepted the part.

The results you've seen. His force and personality explode all over the screen. Into that role went the same painstaking work and study Sydney gives to every character.

His training began with the Ben Greet Shakespearean Repertory Company with whom he toured England and the United States. Then came musical comedies with Mitzi Hajas and years with Lunt and Fontanne. With his only son John he lives a quiet but full life. Best of all he loves having in friends for dinner where talk is lively and gay and the board groans with good food.

Sydney is a simple person. Shopping at Farmer's Market for his own supplies, chatting to customers at Schwab's Drugstore or playing cards with a few friends, he's never the "great star." His mind and heart are ever open to his fellow man.

Important Newcomers: Watch for them - be in the know. This month the new...
worth attention are Sam Wanamaker, Leo Genn and Valli.

Wanamaker began his stage training with the Goodman Theater Art Institute and the Chicago Civic Theater and went right on to becoming Ingrid Bergman's leading man in the Broadway show "Joan of Lorraine." Movies grabbed him for "Ever the Beginning" with director Elliot Nugent going crazy with Sam's questions of why, how come, and what for. You see he isn't content with being an attorney and an actor; he must be a director yet. He's about five-foot-ten, married, has a five-year-old child, Abby.

Valli once met Frank Sinatra in her native Italy and said, "I hope some day I make a picture with you." She did, only in "The Miracle of the Bells" they have no scenes together. Darkly different, arrestingy attractive and considered a great actress in Europe, Valli has starred in thirty-four Italian pictures. During the war she had a narrow escape from the German Secret Service when she refused to work for the Nazis. In 1944 she married Oscar de Mejo, the Italian pianist and composer. Her first American film is "The Paradine Case."

English Leo Genn, who plays Dr. Kit in "The Snake Pit," was an attorney and chief Investigator and Assistant Prosecutor at the Belsen War Crimes trials.

What's more, he was a Lt. Colonel in the British Artillery and played in Laurence Olivier's "Henry V," a role that brought him to New York for the play "Another Part of the Forest." From there he traveled to Hollywood to play in "Mourning Becomes Electra." He's married, has black curly hair, brown eyes and was captain of the soccer team at Cambridge.

Brain Waves
Dear Photoplay:
Thanks for the story “On the Amber Spot” in the June issue. It was wonderful! We’re always interested to read about this breathlessly awaited movie. Why not publish portraits of the leading members of the cast in the roles they portray in “Forever Amber”? Above all, you must give us a Paul Hesse cover portrait of Linda Darnell as Amber! A Photoplay cover of the beautiful Linda as the tempestuous heroine would be worthy of hanging in a museum.

Bob Rosterman
Blair, Nebraska

Photoplay is playing the fairy godmother and you’ll have your wish for a Darnell cover by Hesse very soon.

Dear Editors:
After many years of reading your magazine, it is very refreshing to find an article—even a short one—on Jerome Cowan in the September issue.

It is my belief that the general public has grown tired of the brilliant write-ups on the more important players. Won’t you publish soon one long article on Gene Lockhart—a talented player who deserves an Oscar for every performance?

Also, couldn’t you be a little less fantastic in your descriptions of forthcoming films? None of us have left the theater “mopping our brow” nor did we “scream with fright.”

D. P. Shanks

Producers Take Note:
Dear Photoplay:
Not so very long ago I read in our one and only newspaper that the “Keeper of the Bees” was coming to town. I was thrilled, but when I saw what that picture did to such a grand book, I was so disappointed I could almost have cried. They took out the good and added an almost cheap, worldly thing that we see around us all the time. In fact, we see so much of it, it’s a wonder we don’t all lose what little faith we have in our fellow man.

If a book has any backbone at all, for goodness sake, don’t tear it out, or it will do just what “Keeper of the Bees” did—fall flat on its face.

MRS. ANN HORTON

Open Letter to Al Jolson:
Mr. Jolson, you’re terrific! The verse, the vigor, the vitality of your voice! Why, it’s as fresh and youthful as it was twenty years ago when I first heard you in “The Singing Fool.” Unaltered by time is the magic power of you and your songs to sway an audience—to produce a smile, a tear, and those nostalgic yearnings for yesteryear. Stop me... I’m ravin’.

So, let Larry Parks, Skolsky, Columbia Pictures, et al, gather their well deserved plaudits for “The Jolson Story.” As for me, I’m gonna make with the laurel wreaths and dust off that pedestal for you, Al Jolson, ‘cause you’re still “the greatest entertainer of them all.”

MRS. CHARLOTTE WHITE
Hastings, Nebraska

Editor’s Note: In the “Jolson Story” Larry Parks played the role of Al Jolson, but the singing was done by Al himself.

Brickbat We Won’t Forget
Dear Sir:
In the article “Conversation Piece” by Anita Colby in your October issue it was stated that Lauren Bacall was given a whistle by Humphrey Bogart after production of “Casablanca.” Ingrid Bergman starred in “Casablanca.” Also in “I Can’t Forget” by Sheliah Graham, the authoress mentioned that she would never forget Van Johnson’s smiling face in “Of Human Bondage.” It seems to me that Miss Graham has already forgotten Mr. Johnson has never appeared in this movie to my knowledge.

Please set me straight on these facts.

FREE of the fancy trappings that impeded him in “Monsieur Beaucaire,” Bob Hope goes places in this latest laugh hit. Once more he’s in the clutches of court life, a victim of mistaken identity. This time he’s a carefree disk jockey, peddling dog food; carefree, that is, until a sinister delegation, headed by Signe Hasso, descends upon him, full of wild talk about becoming king of a country he never knew was on the map.

In vain Hope pleads he’s about to be wed, and simply can’t fly off to Barovia or anywhere else. What with secret spies all over the place, determined to assassinate him on the one hand, and his fiancee’s furious family of cops after him on the other, life’s no picnic for poor Bob. How he and the beautiful blonde foreigner manage to outwit their pursuers makes for a gag-strewn story of royal intrigue.

With the competent assistance of William Bendix, Hope tosses about quips left and right—and he’s the boy to toss ‘em. Although he may never become monarch of a mythical country, Bob Hope can certainly claim the title of Crown Prince of Comedy.

V (A) Out of the Past (RKO)

A LOT of low characters play for high stakes in this fast-moving motion picture based on the novel by Geoffrey Homes, “Build My Gallows High.”

As a private detective, attempting to outsmart his gambler-employer and have himself a little romance on the side, Robert Mitchum dominates every scene. And Jane Greer effectively handles her role of wily female, too greedy for her own good. These two discover the dire consequences of the old double-cross, but not before corpses pile up one upon the other, involving them in no end of trouble.

Virginia Huston is sympathetic as the girl who loves Mitchum despite his unsavory past, precarious present and dubious future. Decidedly decorative is Rhonda Fleming, and Kirk Douglas’s smiling scoundrel is convincing. Much of the crackling dialogue between them develops into a sparring contest with nobody emerging as the winner.

However, they do manage to drive home the point that there’s no one in the world you can trust.

Your Reviewer Says: A murder-packed meller.
\( \textbf{F} \) Spirit of West Point
(Film Classics)

That great American sport, football, is in the foreground here with that great American institution, West Point, serving as background. The leading players are the “touchdown twins” themselves: "Doc" Blanchard and Glenn Davis. Surprisingly enough, these giants of the gridiron make acceptable actors; especially Blanchard who, with his powerful build, ingratiating manner, soft Southern accent, seems at ease before the camera. However, it isn't acting prowess that counts, but the All Americans' sensational performances on the field. And when fame overtakes Blanchard and Davis, they must decide whether to switch to professional football with its financial advantages, or stick to Army careers. You'll get your fill of football, as played by experts, including the exciting Army-Navy game of 1944 with sportscasters Bill Stern and Harry Wismer giving a play-by-play description of the scrimmage. You'll also get a glimpse of the grind—physical and mental—that's part of the training of every would-be officer at the Academy.

It all adds up to a picture which for football fans is at once thrilling, compelling, entertaining.

Your Reviewer Says: A field day for football fans.

\( \textbf{F} \) Ride the Pink Horse (Universal-International)

Seems Robert Montgomery—the kind of guy your big sister dreamed of dating—is competing with Bogart these days, in portraying hard-boiled characters. He played a disillusioned detective in "Lady in the Lake." Again in the dual capacity of actor-director, he's a tight-lipped gent who learns that revenge isn't always sweet. It's primarily revenge for the murder of a pal by big-shot crook Fred Clark—and a bit of blackmailing on the side—that bring Montgomery to a little town in New Mexico. There he runs into a government detective Art Smith, also seeking to get the goods on the gangster, and the latter's girl, Andrea King, a double-dealing doll as dangerous as she's deceitful. By way of contrast Wanda Hendrix plays an enigmatic young Indian maid, wise beyond her years, who stubbornly sticks to Bob through thick and thin. Another who proves a friend in need is the owner of the town's merry-go-round, Thomas Gomez, himself merry and round.

One and all perform their parts adroitly against the colorful background of a fiesta.

Your Reviewer Says: Hard-hitting gangster film.

(F) The Foxes of Harrow
(20th Century-Fox)

An ultra-conventional costume drama has been fashioned from Frank Yerby's novel set in New Orleans of 1830. The picture's principal asset is Rex Harrison, who lends his extraordinary personal charm to the role of Irish adventurer turned country gentleman, a common gambler robbed of his birthright, Rex must live by his wits. He manages to win a plantation and wed New Orleans' most beautiful belle—none other than Maureen O'Hara.

Now Maureen's a standoffish wench who won't admit his great attraction for her, so the eternal war 'twixt the sexes is on! She spurns Rex with single-minded persistence, meanwhile suffering exquisitely. Instead of bringing them together, their child causes more misunderstandings. They sulk and rage at each other until you begin to wonder if these two ever will reach that kiss-and-make-up stage.

Unfortunately, the story doesn't travel along a straight line but in a series of spirals. Extraneous situations are dragged in which are diverting enough, but have little bearing on the main theme. Strange voodoo rites among the slaves and violent thunder storms achieve a theatrical rather than dramatic effect. Standouts in an all-around good cast are Richard Haydn, Victor McLaglen, Gene Lockhart.

Your Reviewer Says: That Rex is so romantic!

✓ (F) Desire Me (M-G-M)

MOVIE-GOERS with a preference for drama-drenched romance will revel in this film from a Leonhard Frank novel, originally bearing the more suitable title, "A Woman of My Own." True, there's nothing very new about the Enoch Arden theme, but with Greer Garson to infuse fresh life into it, and Robert Mitchum and Richard Hart on hand to help her, "Desire Me" becomes a dynamic drama calculated to stir your emotions.

Garson, of course, has that elusive charm that sets her apart from other glamour gals. Her portrayal of a lonely young girl, longing for the return of her soldier-husband only to have a fellow-prisoner of war show up in his place, is a penetrating one. As the crafty interloper who hopes to supplant Mitchum, supposedly killed in a Nazi camp, newcomer Richard Hart of the Broadway stage imparts considerable vitality to a demanding role. The story builds up to a gripping climax when the two men meet, one armed with a gun, the other a knife, to fight for the woman they love.

Your Reviewer Says: Plenty of punch.

✓ (F) Unconquered (Paramount)

GET your Indian war whoops ready for this boisterous business straight out of Cecil B. De Mille's slate. He's here again with his big all-star cast, his million-dollar spectacle and a plot full of more perils than Pauline ever encountered. The cool and calm Captain Christopher Holden is Gary Cooper, equal to any emergency. Mr. De Mille might cook 'up; and in this one he cooks up plenty. Paulette Goddard is Abby who steps right off a slave ship into the wilds of the colonies where Indian chief Boris Karloff lurks behind a tree with his war paint on. The wicked conniver is Howard Da Silva and Katherine De Mille is his Indian wife.

"History comes in with lots of wonderful Technicolor to dress up old Fort Pitt and there's some interesting chit-chat between that young Indian fighter, Colonel George Washington, and his stalwart cohorts, not to mention some sets that must have cost a pretty penny. Cooper settles into his role in fine fashion, but Miss Goddard sometimes looks as though she just thought she was playing Injuns, which is certainly no way to act when massacres are going on.

If you like your history and your De Mille, you'll find both of them here, blended into a big motion picture production that sometimes borders on the implausible side but still has more hearty old-fashioned action than you've seen in many a Hollywood day.

Your Reviewer Says: A De Mille special.

GENE AUTRY and the Cass County Boys are themselves again, this time in a Texas town where they get taken by some city slickers and land behind the bars. But not for long—they get right out only to land in more trouble in some place called Serenity. Lynne Roberts backs up the boys and Champion Jr. out on a dude ranch where so many dastardly things happen in fast succession, the Saturday-afternoon audiences are going to run clean out of yells.

Sterling Holloway looks familiar as do the sets, but it's all comfortable and routine in straight Western style. Send the children and if you like Gene and those moments of hummin' and strummin' go yourself.

Your Reviewer Says: Well, you know Autry.

LOUISIANA will sit up and take notice of this movie starring their own governor Jimmie Davis. Once they see it, however, they may sink back in their seats, for, while it's something to watch a "first man" playing a first on the screen, "Louisiana" is still a boring movie. As a short portraying the hard sharecropper's-farm-to-governor's-mansion saga of the crooning legislator who conducted his campaign braced with a band, it might have provided fifteen minutes' adult entertainment, but drawn out to a full-length feature it's apt to have its audience squirming.

Jimmie Davis plays himself—which is certainly something of a "first" in any movie. He is not an actor and there's no one else around to carry the weight of the piece. Margaret Lindsay fills in the background as his wife, John Gallaudet is Charlie Mitchell and there are some familiar Hollywood faces as politicians. The plot squirms around trying to make the most of Jimmy's odd crooning-professor-politician life, but it was more enjoyable as a small magazine feature than it is as a marquee headline. Somebody made a mistake.

Your Reviewer Says: Maybe—if you live in Louisiana.

WHAT the title has to do with this Roy Rogers endeavor is a little song hummed by Roy and the Sons of the Pioneers. The rest of the reels, in a questionable Trucolor that sometimes endows everyone with a greenish tinge, deals with the doings of some illegal hunters who are shooting venison out of season. One of the most lethal of these is Stephanie Bachelor who wears clothes well and looks as though she should have a chance in something more than a Western. Jane Frazee is the good girl with the bad brother and Andy Devine is made to look and act silly as a cameraman in a snark.

All told, this isn't up to those nice Roy Rogers films. It gets a little of a horror-story touch with Roy locked up in an icehouse. We like our Rogers straight, riding Trigger over the range and catching the good old-fashioned villains in his good old-fashioned way.

Your Reviewer Says: Not up to standard.

All tissues aren't KLEENEX?

Homer, how can a mind like yours get so confused? — chided my wife. I've always told you Kleenex and ordinary tissues aren't the same! Why, even the Kleenex box is different. It serves up tissues — saves time and trouble. I want Kleenex — there's no other like it!

Precisely! echoed Dean Doolittle. My dear colleague, Kleenex is one species of tissue — not a term for tissues as a group! Indeed, I find Kleenex most soothing for that (ahem!) sniffling condition which accompanies a cold.
In short, there is only one Kleenex!

Brain Boy, you're slipping! my sister admonished me. I'm a teacher, too, but in my book — Kleenex means just one brand of tissues. Nice, soft tissues — to remove my face cream gently! But do you remember to ask for Kleenex? No.
You mumble "tissues." As if my skin wouldn't know the difference!

Why be a guesser, Professor? said my nephew. Just hold this Kleenex tissue to a light. See any lumps, or weak spots?
If so! You see Kleenex quality smilin' through — always the same — so you're sure Kleenex must be a softie, but tough enough for any Joe Blow! Your eyes tell you there's only one Kleenex!

Lucky I learned...There is only one KLEENEX
AMERICA'S FAVORITE TISSUE

JOAN CAULFIELD looked most exquisite when she stepped into the studio to be photographed by Paul Hesse for Photoplay's Christmas cover. While she stood under the lights and Paul began to line up his shots, I glanced into Joan's dressing room. Every-things was perfectly in order. The dressing table had all her make-up neatly placed on a white towel. The clothes Joan had worn to the studio were tidily folded over a chair back. Her shoes were arranged below in a straight line. She had not simply stepped out of them and left them lopsided. Everything was so neat and orderly I knew we would get a wonderful picture. You may wonder why neatness should tell me this. Here is the reason and an important reason it is, too:
You must be neat to know how to wear your clothes. And you must have a healthy respect and understanding of your clothes to get the best effect.

Joan, as she walked under the lights, asked Hesse where he wanted her. He pointed to a low bench. Before Joan sat down, however, she gently pulled the fabulous silver lame dress to one side. There would be no wrinkles, no folds when she arose.

Have you ever watched a girl plow down in a chair? Seen her skirt rise above her knees? Watched her jacket hunch on her shoulders? Observed her waistline tighten and strain? Then, when this girl stood up, have you seen her pull and adjust her costume? These things are not only unattractive to look at, they are extremely bad for the suit or dress. There is stress and strain on the seams and, of course, where your body has pressed against the fabric, there are wrinkles and folds. Those who design the clothes you wear work very hard to make them flattering and beautiful.
So, my fashion tip is to be neat in everything you do, a tip so simple that every-good designer wishes he could tell it to all his customers. I've told you because, via this cover of Photoplay, I am in a sense your designer.

What questions do you want to ask about your clothes? About motion picture fashions in relation to your way of life? About buying a wardrobe for all occasions? I help solve the problems of stars like Ginger Rogers, Diana Lynn, Anne Baxter and all the other girls who come into my shop and I would be very happy to help you, the fashion-conscious readers of Photoplay, too. Photoplay will send your letters to me. See you next month.

ADVENTURE ISLAND—Pine-Thomas-Paramount: The plot's from Stevenson's "Ebb Tide" and the acting's by that picturesque young couple Rory Calhoun and Rhonda Fleming. (Oct.)

BLACK GOLD—Allied Artists: Anthony Quinn as Charley Eagle is such a nice Indian. Katherine De Mille, as his wife, has too much of an Oxford accent to be convincing, but you may still warm to the affairs of Charley and his Chinese protege. (Oct.)

BLACK NARCISUS—Rank-Universal: This is a strange movie based on Rumer Godden's strange book about some nuns up in the Himalayas. Kathleen Bryan may give you some shudders but Deborah Kerr is too restrained to be outstanding. (Oct.)

BOB, SON OF BATTLE—20th Century-Fox: A loved children's classic gives Lon McCallister and Peggy Ann Garner a chance to try out their Scotch accents. Edmund Gwenn plays a fine Scot. (Sept.)

BODY AND SOUL—Enterprise-UA: Something more than just another prize-fight story with John Garfield shaking everything out of his role and Lilli Palmer as the prettier side of the picture. No hearts-and-flowers story; the punches are delivered straight; and you won't want to miss Canada Lee. (Nov.)

BRUTE FORCE—Universal: A straight right from Hollywood with a strong brutal plot about a prison break and some brutal portrayals by Burt Lancaster, Hume Cronyn, Charles Bickford. (Sept.)

CARAVAN—Eagle-Lion: This has a plot straight out of one of Grandma's old novels with Robert Granger running into a long line of cut-throats in old Spain. Ann Crawford is the belfounse heroine and Dennis Price the monster-twirling cad. (Nov.)

CROSSFIRE—RKO: An A-1 movie, dealing with plain facts and plain people—and the touchy subject of anti-Semitism In an intelligent and courageous manner. Robert Ryan and Robert Mitchum excellent as two soldiers poles apart in their ideas. Robert Young solves the murder. (Oct.)

DARK PASSAGE, THE—Warners: Some plastic surgery features in this. Lauren Bacall exchanges weighted glasses with convict Humphrey Bogart who's on the lam; Agnes Moorehead and Bruce Bennett try hard to keep things in high gear. (Oct.)

DEEP VALLEY—Warners: On-the-drizzly-side film about a broken-down family with Ida Lupino in between feuding parents Fay Bainter and Henry Hull, and Wayne Morris being unexcstingly good and honest. Convict Dane Clark snaps Ida out of her depression, then comes the posse. (Sept.)

FIESTA—M-G-M: Lively Technicolor happenings down in Mexico including gay bullfights and symphony concerts, centering around Esther Williams and her twin brother newcomer Ricardo Montalban. There's Mary Astor, Fortunio Bonanova and Akin Tamiroff to help carry this off successfully. (Sept.)

Excitement in the air—enter Virginia. She says, "First after work comes my date with Woodbury. Its rich cleansing smooths my studio dry skin. In a flash skin's fresh—oh, so smooth." Woodbury's four special softening ingredients smooth skin—but surely. Try it, and see!

You are perfectly correct, and so are a score of our readers who have already noted this Photoplay error. Lauren Bacall's first picture was "To Have and Have Not." And Humphrey Bogart, who starred in that picture with her, gave her the whistle which serves as a conversation piece. Van Johnson was not in "Of Human Bondage." The picture referred to should have been "The Human Comedy."

Casting

Dear Editor:

Now that 20th Century-Fox owns screen rights to "Burlesque," I am going to start a return-to-the-screen campaign for Alice Faye. I saw Miss Faye at her broadcast here last spring. She was perfectly poised and beautifully groomed and I now know who has the best looking legs in Hollywood—and it ain't Betty Grable or Marlene Dietrich.

Incidentally it would be okay with me if Fox borrowed Larry Parks to play opposite her. Alice and Larry in "Burlesque" would have a fine at the Roxy all the way to Radio City Music Hall.

Question Box:

Gentlemen:

I am at a loss to know where else to inquire the name of an actor appearing in "Calcutta." He was a gambler in that picture and was shot at the end. I would really appreciate it if you could tell me.

Max F. da Costa
Vienna, Virginia

Lowell Gilmore plays the role of Eric Tasser, the gambling-casino operator in "Calcutta." A review and cast of the picture appeared in Photoplay last June.

Dear Sir:

Can you give me some information regarding the musical scores in "Cover Girl" and "Cheyenne"? I would like to know the names of the musical numbers played in these two pictures and whether they were recorded.

John C. Berkel
Rochester, N. Y.

The musical score in "Cover Girl" was written by Jerome Kern and the two hit songs were "Long Ago and Far Away," and "Make Way for Tomorrow." There are a number of recordings.

The score for "Cheyenne" was by Max Steiner. With the exception of "Going Back to Old Cheyenne" and "I Am So in Love I Don't Know What I'm Doing" the rest of the score is untitled. None of these songs have been published.

Dear Editors:

Would it be possible for you to give me the name of the book that Joan Bennett wrote several years ago? I believe it was a book on manners.

Jean Marston
Minneapolis, Minn.

The title of Joan Bennett's book is "How to be Attractive" and it is published by Alfred A. Knopf.

Dear Editors:

In your latest edition I saw the picture of Ann Blyth and Frankie Van discussing his book on figure control. Would it be possible for me to get a copy?

You may obtain a copy of Frankie Van's book by writing to Mr. Van, c/o Universal Pictures, Universal City, Cal.

Again the Photoplay family circle enlarges.

Beginning with this issue, with the lovely Joan Caulfield portrait, Don Loper contributes to the Photoplay cover series, so brilliantly executed each month by Paul Hesse. The name of Loper in the past year has become established in Hollywood for top-drawer designing of wardrobes for films (most recently Eagle Lion’s "Out of the Blue" and "Prelude to Night") and of star clothes sold in the swank new Loper salon on the Strip.

For Photoplay, Don will design the cover costume to be worn each month, consulting with Paul Hesse as to decor and color scheme. Photoplay’s editors immodestly herald future covers, costumed by Loper and executed by Hesse, as the most successful in Photoplay’s history and invite readers to look forward next month to June Haver, in a skating ensemble, the month thereafter to the most eloquent camera study of Ingrid Bergman to cross these editorial desks. Future months will bring Hesse portrait studies of Betty Grable, Betty Hutton, Linda Darnell and Rita Hayworth, among others.

Then, beginning with the February issue, Mitch Leisen will write a series of home decorating articles, illustrated with photographs taken in stars’ homes. The name of Leisen is familiar to you as the director and/or producer of a long list of distinguished films. A few: "Perils of Pauline," "Golden Earrings," "Dream Girl" (to be released), "To Each His Own." In Hollywood, he is equally famous for the decorating he has done. Most publicized of his achievements in this field is the apartment house off Sunset Boulevard, where live many of the popular film stars, more notably, Olivia de Havilland Goodrich and Paulette Goddard Meredith.

For Photoplay’s readers, Mitch Leisen will create articles to guide them in the successful decorating of their own homes—whether one-room apartment, teen-age bedroom in the family homestead, honeymoon cottage or substantial house. It is a series intended to bring to Americans, interested in creating or re-creating beautiful homes, some of the brilliant talent reserved until now for million-dollar motion picture productions.

Welcome, Don Loper and Mitch Leisen.
Search for Happiness

So many rumors to be answered, so many questions to be asked—who else but Greer Garson could speak so revealingly about herself?

BY LOUELLA O. PARSONS

"NEVER again will I let troubles get me down. All the unhappiness of the last year is disappearing like a cloud. I feel like a new person. I am a new person."

It was Greer Garson speaking. The past ten unhappy months of frustration, ill health and a broken marriage are over and past for her and she is herself again—lovely, gay and independent.

If this were not true I would not be writing this story, for when Greer was completely miserable she saw no one, not even her oldest friends.

In many cases, I'm inclined to have my tongue in cheek over the "troubles" of the successful and indulged beauties of Hollywood. So many of them are just the pinings and pipings of spoiled darlings temporarily deprived of what they want.

But certainly Greer's assorted bad breaks were far from imagined.

Early in the year she suffered a bad accident when she was washed against a rock at Carmel, while making scenes for the jinxed "Desire Me." The injury and shock resulted in months of ill health.

It began in Hanyang, China, and ended in Hollywood, where an old missionary’s faith came to rest on a star

BY MAXINE ARNOLD

After five years at the Mission in Hanyang, China, Father Ranaghan was back in the United States to raise funds for the work the St. Columban’s Foreign Mission Society was doing in China, Korea, Burma and the Philippines.

It was a heartbreaking struggle but they were winning over overwhelming odds. . . . A wound healed at the dispensary, food given to a starving family, dark eyes brightening over the story of the Christ Child born in the manger in Bethlehem. They asked for that story now, “Yeh-su Sheng-than,” they said, meaning Jesus’ Holy Birth. The priest smiled to himself thinking of their bubbly greetings on Christmas Day. . . . “Gung-shi . . . Gung-shi”—meaning, “Isn’t it wonderful, it’s a great day, a Merry Christmas to you!”

As he drove along Sunset Boulevard that warm sunny December afternoon, the bespectacled, cherub-faced Irish priest determined again that the good work must go on and again asked himself how he could better make this country see the distress that existed there. Somehow he must find his way to our hearts.

The air was heavy with orange blossoms. Christmas poinsettias spread scarlet splendor as far as the eye could see.

Hanyang and his beloved mission, 400 miles up the Yangtze River . . . all the ignorance, destitution and famine—and the Japanese massing at the border—seemed very far away.

As he stopped the jalopy in front of the Paramount Studios where Bing Crosby had his offices then, (Continued on page 96)

YOU'RE on Stone Canyon Drive, in the ultra section of Bel-Air, just beyond Cary Grant's Normandy house and Greer Garson's English dwelling. The country is wooded and hilly. Bel-Air used to be a wild bridle path. And the Bel-Air Hotel, unique because of its tropical landscaping and distinctive architecture, although opened in 1944, was completed only this year.

With our young honeymooners, Nancy Guild and Charles Russell, we cross a stone bridge over a brook bordered by flowering eucalyptus and hibiscus and register at a long pink stucco building. The other buildings are detached yet linked by gorgeous plants. The dining room, built around a tall gray sycamore banked with ferns, boasts a huge fireplace in which burn enormous logs. At night, the hotel is at its dreamiest. Hidden flower-shaped lights throw lacy shadows on the walls.

Time out for Laughter

By Kay Campbell

Silhouetted against the California dusk, a maid in shining armor rides the crest of the hills. In the stretching shadows the animal beneath her seems more like a mediaeval beast than a horse.

Residents of the upper Beverly Hills colony do a double-take over their before-dinner cocktails. They think they are seeing things. And they are—they are seeing a dream realized. For Ingrid Bergman, in a coat of mail, has been riding an immense percheron, the farm horse of the 15th Century, in order to accustom herself to the rigidity of the metal she wears in "Joan of Lorraine."

It has always been Ingrid's dream to play "Joan of Arc." Even as a child she pored through books on the subject of her favorite heroine with the result that today she is an authority on the life of the Maid of Orleans.

In fact, it was an unwritten agreement between her and David O. Selznick that someday he would cast her as Joan, which lured her to this country in the first place. That understanding was never fulfilled, which is probably just as well, for now Ingrid is half-owner (Continued on page 106)

Joe COTTEN always reminds me of Joe Cotten. I know no other man who could be supported by his bride without losing her respect or his self-respect, or both. But Joe managed this. You’ve heard, of course, how he and Lenore met. Serving his acting apprenticeship with the Miami Civic Theater, Joe was cast in a role that required him to play the piano. And he couldn’t play the piano. So backstage, Lenore—Lenore Kipp then—played the exquisite music that the audience believed Joe played onstage.

It didn’t take them long to discover they were meant for each other. I’m literal, not sentimental, when I say that. For still, over fifteen years later, they are inseparable and indissoluble. To speak of one without the other would never occur to me.

For a long time Joe’s career was, to say the least, uncertain. Sometimes he worked and sometimes he didn’t. Lenore, on the other hand, had the steady income of an editor of Harper’s Bazaar.

Joe never liked this set-up but he managed to be civilized about it most of the time. It was only when some disappointment grimmer than others came along that he let off masculine steam, that he expostulated, as he did one day: “My God, Lenore, I can’t live on you forever!”

Upon such occasions, Lenore, bless her, always was magnificently casual. “Darling,” she would say, “don’t worry! You’re going to be so rich you won’t even mind when I come to you for a new diamond necklace.

“We’re partners, Joe,” she would go on, not too seriously. “I’m not unselfish or noble or (Continued on page 95)

September 1947, the happily romantic pair, Mark Stevens and Hedy Lamarr...

October 1947, the unexpectedly reunited Stevenses...

And by the time you read this who knows? For the Mark Stevens marriage, I'm afraid, is too typical of recent Hollywood unions.

How emotionally unstable can you be, this reporter of the Hollywood scene asks herself, recalling that only three days before Mark and Annelle announced that they had reconciled Hedy Lamarr was decorating a small apartment in which Mark had set up bachelor's quarters.

Mark and Hedy fell in love, you'll remember—or so they said—just four days after Mark broke up with his wife and just six weeks after Hedy had brought her divorce suit against her husband John Loder.

I don't know how soon Mark telephoned Hedy for a date after he moved out of his home with Annelle, but I believe it was within forty-eight hours. And within two weeks after leaving Annelle, Mark was flying with clockwork regularity to visit Hedy at Lake Tahoe where her doctor had sent her to regain her shattered health. He flew four times in four weeks, although each trip he could only stay one day, Sunday. Because he was working with Olivia de Havilland (as her husband) in "The Snake Pit" at the time, Mark made the long plane journey to Hedy late Saturday night, returning on Sunday evening to be ready to report for work Monday morning (Continued on page 101)

IN HOLLYWOOD, the land of milk and honey, the town where men are men and women are padding, all the memorable events occur at parties. And, by memorable events I of course mean fights. Yet I've never seen anybody so much as raise his dukes at a Hollywood brawl. A Hollywood party isn't like a party anywhere else. One of the most brilliant that the Beautiful Wife and I galloped off to was given by Atwater Kent, the enormously popular old geezer who used to make radios in Philadelphia. In one month Mr. Kent may give six, seven or eight parties. One person laughingly said, "I haven't attended the last twenty." But everybody has a good time and enjoys the hospitality as the wine and food are called. The first party at Kent's I attended was exclusive—only 150 guests.

As soon as you get inside the door (which is not too easy in case you have been to a Hollywood cocktail party just before) a waiter sticks a champagne glass in your hand. Just to be polite you take a drink out of it. The waiter fills it up and you take another drink—you have to be well-mannered at a time like this—and this goes on for some time. This can get very dangerous, especially for poor Mr. Kent's furniture.
Good old Mr. Kent is so party conscious that recently he was embarrassed when a guy came up and said: “I heard something uncomplimentary about you.”

“Heavens, what was it?”

“I don’t like to repeat. It’s only hearsay.”

“Out with it,” said Mr. Kent.

“Well,” stammered the guy, “I heard that one night last week you had dinner . . . alone!”

Mr. Kent hung his head, and hollowly said, “It’s true . . . but please don’t ever mention it.”

A thing like that could ruin him socially.

Well, about eight champagnes after we got there, we all sat down and ate the most wonderful dinner we’d ever had, which we wished we could have seen, only we couldn’t, on account of the champagne. Then there started a beautiful evening of entertainment, with Edgar Bergen sitting on Charlie McCarthy’s knee . . . excuse me, that’s the way it looked to me at the time.

“Charlie, we have here the cream of society,” Bergen said.

“Did you say scream of society?” said Charlie.

“No, cream of society.”

“Hasn’t it curdled in spots?” said Charlie.

“But cream always (Continued on page 110)
Be a Christmas

This article is a plot, frankly—a plot designed to make you a "Christmas Belle."

All that is necessary to sketch in the background of this plot is a thoughtful you. Cost is less important than thoughtfulness. Remember, thoughtlessness can be a very expensive thing when you try haphazardly to fill a generous impulse just before stores close on Christmas Eve.

Start by minutely planning your Christmas list, your parties and your appearance. Self-discipline should be the keynote of this planning. Begin right now by shaping up your Christmas list with things carefully chosen, which your friends really want and can use.

If you know how to knit, crochet, or sew, now is the time to put your needles and your originality to work. Why not make a stole of diamond-shaped design for a pretty young girl who could use it?

RITA HAYWORTH and Victor Mature—what a combination for a Hollywood photographer. That was something we boys never thought we'd see again. Especially since we knew how Vic felt when Rita broke off with him during the war, while he was on North Atlantic Patrol, to marry Orson Welles. Many of us thought Vic had never been able to forget her.

I'd heard from a fan at Ciro's that they were having dinner at the Chanteclair, so me and my camera hot-footed it over. And there they were—in deep conversation. It was the first time I'd seen Rita since she returned from Europe—and she looked beautiful! I told her so too. (What guy wouldn't?) She's letting her hair grow and it's now in a long bob. I liked it and I told her that I did. "I'm awfully glad, Hymie, because otherwise I'd feel badly about it," Rita joked. She said she and Vic were on the town doing the night spots "just like old times." Seems Vic had to leave the next morning at seven for Kanab, Utah, where his picture "Ballad of Furnace Creek" is being filmed. This was his only chance to see Rita for some time.

Just then the violinist came over to the table and asked them what they'd like him to play. They settled for a Strauss waltz and that was my last look—Rita and Vic, soft candlelight and sweet music.

Dick, of “Assigned to Treasury,” has set a new course for his future!

Up to the minute: Dick, an enthusiastic sailor, sets the clock ahead for an early rising but...

June has other plans! She’s much more enthusiastic about sleeping LATELY, Dick Powell has been haunting the docks in San Diego and Balboa. He’s looking for another sailboat. This time he’d like one which is bosomy and comfortable about the waist. One which won’t lift her skirts and go dancing across the sea like a hussy, but will wallow a bit and probably shake her bustle as she waddles out of a long trough—one, above all, that June will enjoy and trust.

“That ship, that Santana,” Dick still murmurs, talking of his erstwhile ocean-going sailboat. “Oh, she was a lady. But she was dangerous. That’s why June didn’t trust her. For, like many beautiful ladies, she was skittish, she was temperamental. You couldn’t take your eye off her for an instant. June has to That's Dick Powell, who acquired a new outlook instead of a large waistline and proved a detour can lead straight to success.

June Allyson's complete distrust of the Santana began one day returning from Catalina when a brisk, slatting breeze behind sent them through the green combers with their bow buried and their rail awash.

"Every time the Santana rode a big one out," Dick says, "she shook herself like a wet spaniel and got set for another. I was at the wheel and June was crouched behind a companionway trying to keep one square inch of her clothing dry. I howled with a kind of insane delight—which comes over people who like sweet-going sailboats. June thought I'd gone suddenly nuts."

McCallister by name—young enough to be intrigued by life, old enough to be intriguing

BY BEN MADDOX

Lon McCallister called for Ann Blyth at half-past five, in his opinion the best time for a date to start on fine evenings. They drove leisurely towards the Pacific, responding silently to the sunset as they wound through the hills between Hollywood and the ocean. He mixed in romantic music from his car radio. He used to drive too fast, but Ann’s cured him of that.

Besides, less zipping through traffic lets him hold her hand comfortably. Strolling to the end of the pier at Malibu Beach they watched row after row of waves pour in below them. Any girl Lon likes must savor the sea. Suddenly hungry, they hurried into the Tail o’ the Cock, his favorite restaurant that’s perched above the pounding (Continued on page 103)

WHENEVER I am asked if I have ever been to Venice, I make the questioner decide the answer for himself. Here are the facts.

You see in 1924 my father, William Powell, and my mother, Eileen Wilson Powell, had agreed to disagree. They had not gone to the point of getting a divorce, but a parting of the ways was decided upon. Unknown to one another (both being romantic) they decided to go to the same place to forget—Italy. They ran into each other in Venice. It was midsummer. A full Italian moon was riding the skies—music floated up from the gondolas gliding along the Grand Canal. I made my debut in 1925.

My first boyish awareness of my father was in 1929, when he had come back from Paris. (In spite of Venice, my arrival had worked no miracles. Shortly after my birth, father and mother were legally separated, although they remained good friends.) What a glamour parent Father seemed to me then! (Continued on page 80)

In the early frontier period of America men or women white slaves were sold for about fifty dollars. Convicted of murder complicity, Abby Hale (Paulette Goddard) has been sentenced to servitude in this country.

Capt. Holden's trek through Indian country has authentic background. Location units traveled 5000 miles—spent 8 weeks in Pennsylvania forests.

Capt. Holden (Gary Cooper) buys Abby but she is tricked into believing Earth (Howard Da Silva), trader and traitor, owns her. Against a background of massacre and horror they battle for love of this English bond slave.

Hollywood shakes history out of its doldrums with frontier America the stage, Cecil B. DeMille the lavish producer and the heroine a beautiful bond slave.
A scandal is created when Capt. Holden takes Abby to the King’s Ball in the frontier post, Ft. Pitt—one day to become a steel empire, Pittsburgh!

Torment and destruction spreading across the frontier bring Abby to the torture stake and Holden through the agony of the historic ninety-day siege of Ft. Pitt
LAZIEST MAN IN TOWN

He prefers the hammock to the hoe but Fred MacMurray must have swung both to be one of Hollywood's highest paid actors in 1946

Beaver Dam Bud in characteristic repose on set of "Miracle of the Bells"
THE man who earned one of the highest salaries paid for acting or anything else last year is a monument to our great Midwest, rising six-feet-three in air from pedestals size twelve. In Beaver Dam, Wisconsin, they call him Bud.

Most men are like trolley cars running contentedly on their rails, Somerset Maugham observes, but now and then you are fascinated by a sprightly flivver that darts in and out of traffic and speeds jauntily across country.

Beaver Dam Bud was a hot rod.

There was a time, after coming to Hollywood, when Bud hid out by day in a woman's apartment and baked pies to relieve his tension. Under influence of pie the woman married him. He has baked only one pie since but continues to hold her. He taught her to cook.

This colossus of the dramatic and domestic arts is grandson of a Presbyterian evangelist. The Rev. MacMurray must have depended upon free-will offerings for his livelihood but his take was nothing like Bud's. Our free-will offering last year to Beaver Dam Bud, now revered as Mr. Fred MacMurray by the United States Treasurer, amounted to $203,525.66.

"Mind the sixty-six cents," says Mr. MacMurray, of Scottish descent.

THE stylists and garment-makers are begging Hollywood to take a firm stand in the matter of the extreme fashion changes and tell the world what film stars will or will not wear on the screen these coming months. Obviously, a lot of manufacturers feel there's no use making the type of things that Hollywood glamour-pusses won't wear and consequently gals across the nation won't buy.

Well, they really ought to talk to some of the Hollywood glamour-boys! I haven't met up with one yet who liked any of the changes, and certainly not the extreme ones. And as for the padded hips, the rounded shoulders, the long day-time droops, Clark Gable says, "Pretty soon every girl will be a blind date!"

But, as we leap about we note that most of the Hollywood belles at this point are not going to extremes. Take Joan Crawford, for instance. I've seen her in ballet-length cocktail and evening dresses (the one she wore to the Darryl Zanuck's' party for Gen. Montgomery was a dream of white net—yards and yards gathered to a tiny, corseted waist—the bodice of which was heart- (Continued on page 108)

CHRISTMAS is really my favorite holiday because of the opportunity it offers one to relive the joyous, familiar incidents of past years. Yuletide magic, compounded of warmth, gayety, charity and generosity, rest deeply in the hearts of everyone during this season.

To me, especially it is a “home holiday.” Being an Easterner, I’m fond of a “White Christmas.” And, when December arrives in Hollywood, Mother and I busy ourselves arranging our return to New York, where Dad and my sisters, Betty and Mary, are living.

Our family are basically sentimentalists and we go all-out for tradition. Milk-and-brandy punch for the familiar Christmas Eve toasts—church on Christmas morning for the familiar prayers—dinner with the old-fashioned trimmings and, as a natural result, the stuffed feeling that follows.

Some families open their gifts on Christmas Eve. Our own custom is to wait until morning, perhaps merely to heighten the suspense. File ‘em under the tree, and no one cares if one can’t sleep for curiosity.

Then the exciting, shared joy of trimming the tree. I confess I’m the careless type of trimmer, but Mary, Betty and Mom, however, are the meticulous type, hanging each gold and silver ball and each string of tinsel with calculated artistry. Luckily, the general over-all effect has never depended on my usually... (Continued on page 70)

TINSEL'ROUND MY FINGER

(Continued from page 68) impatient efforts which consist of tossing a handful of something shiny and then hoping it has landed in the proper place.

Opening the dusty boxes of ornaments and lights each year is akin to opening a memory book. One finds the silver star that's probably older than I. Something would go wrong with my holiday world if that particular star wasn't twinkling on top of the tree. And there's the wax angel with the gauzy skirt. She made her debut on the same tree that sheltered the most exciting gift I ever received—my first wrist watch.

As most of us do, I like lots of small gifts, and all of them surprises—rather than one big and oh-so-final present. However, in my gifts, I try to include one gay, mad thing that the recipients wouldn't think of buying for themselves. By wrapping the presents with colorful paper and ribbons I manage to give to all packages a measure of mystery and excitement.

UNTIL the present time I've liked to spend Christmas afternoon alone with my sisters and parents.

"Until the present time," I say, because this year I find myself with the luck to be able to give some pleasure to others just by offering some of the time that used to belong entirely to me. If I may, I should like to explain this by citing a recent incident.

It was shortly after finishing "Welcome Stranger," with Bing Crosby and Barry Fitzgerald, that I made a personal appearance trip. One night, after the theater, I was eating in a small, midwestern restaurant. Timidly, a waitress asked me to sign an autograph book. It was for her daughter, a girl about my age, slowly dying of tuberculosis of the bone. Bedridden since she was fourteen, this girl had given herself a college education. After hearing the story I asked the waitress whether I could visit her daughter. She said we could and after she had finished work we left for the hospital.

I can still see that girl's eyes as I stepped through the door of the ward. She had never seen me on the screen. But I came from Hollywood, and apparently she felt I brought with me some of the movie magic from the pictures she hadn't been able to see for five years. Moreover, I had talked with—even worked with—Bing Crosby and Bob Hope. What were they like in real life? Were they as happy-go-lucky off screen as on?

She was holding my hand while we talked and when I was about to leave, she let go of my fingers, one by one. And as I left the ward I'll always remember her face and the other faces and eyes strained after me all the way to the door. Those patients didn't know where I came from—just the coming of any visitor was a break in the terrible monotony.

Remembering these things, I'll make it a point to see that a good part of my holiday this year will be spent visiting hospitals, Veterans' homes, or orphanages and taking them simple gifts. It seems so little to do for those less fortunate.

Another opportunity for added joy for those of us who spend Christmas in this country is the realization that we can do something to make Christmas a little happier and less dreary for those overseas. For my overseas gifts I hope to purchase those wonderful little articles that cost us so little and still mean so much. I read the newspaper ads and when I notice a sale on cosmetics, for instance, I'll buy them. I'll undoubtedly have a wonderful time visualizing the European girls opening the lipsticks and scented soaps—frivolities they haven't been able to buy for years.

No doubt about it, the way to get the most out of the holiday is to give, and not only to receive. It seems to me that in this way, we absorb so much more of the good Christmas spirit.

It may sound a little silly but it would be wonderful if one would mentally tie a string of tinsel around one's finger as a reminder that the good things of life remain forever.

Christmas and the Christmas spirit could conceivably be 365 days a year.

Cosmetics for Christmas

Pretty teen-ager JANE POWELL is giving her family and relatives cosmetics for Christmas. Crazy about them herself, her theory is that those to whom she gives such glamorous gifts should be as delighted to receive them as she would be.

Here's Jane's List
For her mother, Mrs. Eileen Burce, she's making a make-up kit. Every time Jane, whose real name is Suzanne Burce (she also answers to her two nicknames, "Rey" and "Bert"), pauses at a cosmetic counter, she admires the make-up kits displayed. Some, no larger than pocketbooks, can be used as one when the cosmetics are put out. Then there are the kind which, when the tray is removed, make pretty jewelry cases; or, if large enough, overnight bags. She's looked at the expensive as well as the budget-priced ones. Like every Christmas shopper, Jane has the budget problem, too...Her grandmother, Mrs. Charles Baker, of Portland, Oregon, loves perfume. So Jane will give her a bottle of her favorite scent.

Cousins are Included
For her twenty-two-year-old cousin, Barbara Carlson, of Beverly Hills, Jane is getting cologne and either sachet powder (it's really dry perfume) or novelty sachet bags. They're nice to scatter among lingerie or to tie to dress hangers. She might, if her budget permits, also buy Barbara an attractive purse-size perfume dispenser. They're so reasonably priced...Billy Ann Baker, another cousin, lives in Tacoma, Washington. She's eighteen and has lots of dates. Like all young girls, she's always trying new lipsticks. So Billy Ann is slated for a set of three or more of the newest shades, so she can have a regular lip-color bar...Her other Baker cousins, Shirley, twelve, and Nancy, seven, also live in Tacoma. She knows they'll squeal with joy over a set each of one of the combination bath sets, containing two or more of these lovely items: Perfumed soap, bubble bath, bath powder, talcum, bath salts, cologne, or toilet water...Jane plans to give her male relatives something nice in men's toiletries...She hopes that you'll get some ideas from her gift list for yours. She joins me in wishing you all a Merry Christmas!

CHARM OF Coleen

YOU saw Coleen Gray as Victor Mature’s love in "Kiss of Death." The critics of course are still exclaiming that she is "sensational" and "terrific." Small wonder then that the week before she had finished her next picture, "Nightmare Alley" opposite Tyrone Power, she was scheduled to start work in still another, "The Ballad of Furnace Creek," in which she will again appear opposite Mature.

Honey-blonde and blue-eyed Coleen is another of the "new intellectual school" of newcomers now making good in motion pictures. She holds a B.A. degree from Hamline University, St. Paul, Minnesota, and was well into her postgraduate work at the University of Southern California when she became interested in little theater. An agent spotted Coleen in her third play—then came the movies.

Coleen and her writer-researcher husband, Rodney Amateau, have had many spirited arguments—usually about books. But she has never been as annoyed with him as she was the first day she met him—October 12, 1944, to be exact.

Coleen was to be tested by Twentieth Century-Fox and during her interview with the test director a strange man was present. He didn’t say a word, but sat in a corner and watched her with detached interest. Coleen, uncomfortably aware of him, tried to concentrate on the director’s questions. But the more she thought about the silent man, the madder she became.

After the test, the silent one introduced himself and asked, "How did you like the test I wrote for you?" Light dawned. Coleen realized he had been observing her under difficult conditions to see what kind of test would suit her best. He’d done a good job. She told him so—and a romance was born.

Two days later the studio signed Coleen. A year later she married Rodney Amateau and now they have a year-old daughter, Susan.

Rodney and Coleen love to go to the little theater performances where struggling novices showcase their talents. The Actor’s Lab is their favorite little theater, for it was here that Coleen learned the techniques that helped her so in her first picture, "Red River." It was her outstanding performance in this which led to the lead in "Kiss of Death."

Coleen has boundless energy and leads a busy life. Besides working in motion pictures, she keeps house herself, takes ballet and is learning to paint. And—with all this, she’s a good cook too!
(Continued from page 34) "Adventure," her co-starring picture with Clark Gable cleaned up at the box office but met with blistering reviews that must have struck deep at the pride of a girl who, since she has been in Hollywood, has been nominated for the Academy Award every year, except one. Greer has also been a two-year winner of Photoplay's Gold Medal Award for "favorite actress" in polls conducted by Audience Research, Inc.

Last, but far from least, the moorings holding her marriage to Richard Ney together were slipping and straining dangerously.

At the time of their romance, her close friends had begged her not to marry young Ney. They had prophesied the marriage would not last.

"But I was incurably romantic," she told me. "Richard represented youth, romance and happiness to me. I finally refused to listen to the friends who told me we were unsuited in temperament and ideas."

We were sitting in Greer's living room in the beautiful home that frames her personality so perfectly. She was wearing a white dress with touches of her favorite bright green, her red-gold hair soft around her face, and I thought what a bitter thing it must have been for this proud woman to admit her hasty marriage had been a mistake. She is so independent, so self-reliant and such a stickler for convention.

"I want to say very quickly, Louella," she went on, "that I am not sorry I married Richard. We had happy years together and I am still fond of him. He can be very amusing and witty and there were times when we were very happy."

"I think I understand," I said. "His jealousy and his juvenile actions were difficult for a mature woman to take."

"Remember," I told her, "I know Richard very well, and I, too, am fond of him. But I realize his adoration of you and his constant fear of losing you must have been dreadful to live with. I still say—somewhere, sometime there will be a happy marriage in the cards for you, Greer."

She shrugged her shoulders almost imperceptibly. I knew she was thinking of her first marriage in England, to a barrister much older than she was, and then of this second marriage to a boy emotionally and mentally so much younger.

"It would be stupid of me to say I'll..."

BORDERLINE ANEMIA* is a threat to your pep and popularity!

Do you tire too easily? Is your color fading—your face unbecomingly pale? Do your enthusiasm and stamina and charm seem to be waning?

Very often these effects stem from a blood condition, and you may be the victim of a Borderline Anemia—due to a ferro-nutritional blood deficiency.

Your red blood cells may be faded and shrunken, weakened to a point where they cannot transmit full energy to your body. Results of medical surveys show that up to 68% of the women examined—many men and children—have this Borderline Anemia.

How Ironized Yeast Tablets Build Up Your Blood and Vigor

So, if your color is fading—your energy falling—due to this blood deficiency, take Ironized Yeast Tablets. They are formulated to help build up faded red blood cells—thus to help restore vigor and good looks. Continuing tiredness and pallor may come from other conditions—so consult your doctor regularly.

But in a Borderline Anemia, take Ironized Yeast Tablets to help build up your blood. Take them to start your energy shifting back into "high"—to help restore the natural color to your cheeks! Take them so you can enjoy life again!

I REMEMBER those three awful summers when he insisted I go to camp, which I hated, as it meant I packed off around the entire West, roughing it in mountains and desert, when I would much have preferred being at my father's then luxurious home that was all white paint, glitter, swimming pools, outdoor patios, parties and that beautiful girl who for two years was his wife, Carole Lombard. Don't misunderstand. Father didn't send me off because he wanted to get rid of me. He thought I might get some little discipline that way, and maybe I did, but it wasn't very noticeable.

I remember one time when Father was interviewing the head of a highly select school, which he was trying to worm me into. Father was in the drawing room, playing a very refined scene, detailing to the visitor what a dear, quiet boy I was. Little Lord Fauntleroy in Hollywood. From the hall I overheard this conversation and, nattily arrayed in a beat-up pair of riding trousers and an awful hat, I picked up a revolver and rushed in on the tableau, yelling, "Stick 'em up."

It was quite a curtain.

I recall, too, when I first went to Princeton and Father accompanied me down there, from the Waldorf-Astoria where we had been staying. My going to Princeton was the gratification of a dream of his. He'd never been able to afford college but he attended the American Academy of Dramatic Art and had played stock in Trenton, N. J., in 1912. He had seen "the gray, ivoried towers of Princeton" at that time, and had never recovered.

When I checked in, Father decided to help me unpack. As he opened one of my bags, he found several of his best ties. But that wasn't what made him sore. I had also packed two hotel towels. He hit the roof, not so much because that isn't done (he says here!) but because of what the hotel would think. "They will say William Powell stayed here and stole towels," he pointed out with dignity. There was no calming him until I sent the towels back.

As Father Day on screen in the present ent "Life with Father," he thunders about magnificently—but that is acting. Personally, when he gets sore, he never shouts. Instead he goes in for a very chilling reserve. But he is like Father Day in his love of food. Every dinner is an occasion and the food and service must be perfect.

When he goes into a new restaurant he has the maître d' over, explains his likes and dislikes. If the next time he goes there, the maître d' doesn't remember all this he is very disturbed. His sense of elegance is disturbed. He knows what wine must be chilled to what degree, what goes with what, and all the rest of the epicurean routine.

Yet, though he dresses elaborately on screen, or when any necessity for display comes up in private life, among friends, his favorite costume is a bath towel, no more, how could there be less.

He has one hat. He bought it in 1912 and he deeply loves it. In its youth, it was a brown Fedora. Now it is battered and stained, but he clings to it relentlessly. He also has an old bathrobe which he has owned for nobody knows how long. It has a rip down the back, but he won't change it. Mousie, his wife, hopefully buys him new ones but he tosses those away.

When I was a little boy, he built a house in Beverly Hills—the one that was all white glitter pools. It cost a fortune—but he was very lucky. For it worked all that ostentation out of his system and then—trust him—he unloaded it at a profit. Now he alternates between his comfortable house in Beverly Hills, a small place he has in Palm Springs, and the house in the Valley where my wife and I live.

Mousie is always up in the mornings, bounding with energy. She plays a mean game of tennis. Father used to play and once he tried to teach it to me—but now he says his favorite sport is sitting in the sun on his two-by-six piazza. When they are in Palm Springs, Mousie plays daily at the Racquet Club and Father will sit there, watching her, commenting on her game. But all he wants is the sun-tan.

He drives back and forth to Palm Springs in his Pontiac. The Pontiac is as beaten up as his old hat, and he loves it just as much. At premieres or swank hotels, when cars are being called and big slick Cads and Lincolns come rolling out, they announce “Mr. Powell’s car” and then that ten-year-old job comes rattling up. People turn and say, “Why the poor man,” but it doesn’t bother Father at all.

Every once in a while somebody asks me what it is like to have a stepmother who is merely five years my senior. I say it is great—if she is like Diana Lewis. Ten years ago, Father was very ill. He was depressed and moody and he felt that the best part of his life was over. Then he met DI. He is inclined to be retiring. She is all outward going. She taught him to play games. She taught him to dance. He had always insisted that he couldn’t dance, but you should see him now. He is particularly wicked at the tumba.

She’s made him into a party hound. He says he doesn’t want to go out, when the invitations arrive. DI pleads, “Oh, come on.” Father protests. He knows he is going to be bored stiff. He’d rather stay home. Then he goes to the party—and he’s always the last guest to leave.

He has always loved big words, and he uses them very exactly. He is constantly “abjuring” me, and everything is “by token of.” Before he uses a word, he carefully looks it up, getting its Latin or Greek derivation. Then if it is something no average human would use, he’ll start toss ing it about, and get a big boot watching people squirm, not knowing what he is talking about.

He is a very generous guy and he had always, uncomplainingly, carried a great responsibility. He started with nothing—and he now has a whole group of people whom he supports. My grandmother is the oldest, but there are many others.

I feel that I first began really appreciating Father after I was in service. Just before I enlisted we had our only clash. I had survived a pretty wild semester at Princeton, during which we had got our wires crossed. I had misunderstood Father to say he’d send me a $100 a month allowance. So my first New York weekend, I spent the whole hundred, but fast. Then I wrote, reminding him of his promise.

He replied that I was suffering a gross delusion if I thought he was going to finance me in a New York night-club education. After that we wrote insultingly back and forth. Finally he offered to loan me money and I said I’d take it, but at 6% interest. He refused. I insisted. He sent me the $100 and I started paying it back, twenty dollars a month and the interest.
It was very rugged.

Then the Christmas holidays came and I went berserk. I majored in the Stock
Club and had to sell practically everything
I owned. Father had given me a typewriter.
When I started writing him in long hand he knew what was up and I was in the dog house. When I enlisted I still owed Father $50 of that $100.
The Marines—or something—knocked the idiot out of me. Whatever it was, when I got out in 1945, I was glad to go back to Princeton and really work.

When Father came to see me at that time—and incidentally, he gave the best performance as an old Princeton alumnus you ever saw—I was delighted to discover we had become closer than ever before.
He was no longer merely my old man.
He was my friend. It was great. Now that I'm out of school and working here in Hollywood, the closeness has kept on growing.

I'm no actor. I didn't inherit Father's ability. I am in the story department at Warners. And I'm very happily married.

Father is even mixed up in that. Except for him having taken me to a cocktail party in New York, I might never have met my bride. It was a Sunday noon cocktail party and for me it was the end of a tough night. The room was swarming with pretty girls. One of them came over to me, asked me if I felt as rocky as I looked. Her name was Irene Booth and she was a New York stage and radio actress. Father had given me some tickets to a game at the Polo Grounds. I asked her to join me. She did—and now look.
She's very cute. She insists her nose turns up too much—but I don't agree. I like it just the way it is. I like her just the way she is, which is a very nice deal.

Father and I pick these wives of ours off to bed and then we sit up and have bull sessions. We have the whole world dissected before we finish. Then we put it back together again the next night.

Father is constantly mellowing, and he is much more liberal in his point of view than he used to be. But he is still a kid in many ways. He always will be. He loves his work and he basically loves life. He really suffers when he gets a bad picture, but when he hits one like "Life with Father" he is very happy about it.

I guess, if I tell the truth, and nothing but, I'll have to say that while I have always loved him, it is only the last few years that I have come to appreciate his sensitiveness, his artistry, his honesty.
He's a great man.

And he is, definitely, my favorite father.

Laziest Man in Town

Just as the studio he is liked by all hands, who consider him the regular normal guy. He never blows up except in his lines, and that he does often. He had never overcome the idleness that makes us Midwesterners lovable. A gossip columnist thinks there is something lacking in a man who has not provided a line of gossip during twelve years in Hollywood.

"I am lazy," Mac says. "I guess that's why I am an actor."

All men who prefer the hammock to the hoe will hail him hero.

In longitudinal repose, Mac reaches from end to end of his perambulating dressing room. He could be mistaken for an emblazoner's display were it not for a flick of the lip when speaking, harder to detect than ventriloquist Bergen's. He avoids tiresome words in favor of um, hump, and a half-inch nod.

"You prefer comedy," says the feeder.

"Um," says Mr. "Easier."

This oration depicted him from pants pockets to disheveld cigarette. It revitalizes and he adds: "I'm not a funny man though.

I UCK and laziness made him a funny man he says. He neglected to latch his trousers. He was conducting a band on the stage at the time. He also was impersonating a seal and Leopold Stokowski. It was as Mr. Stokowski that the neglect became evident. The audience immodestly whooped. His furtive attempts to reunite the baggy trousers drove them hysterical.

Mac's gift for relaxing brings to mind the relaxed race of admirable Africans as portrayed by the two Black Crows. One sighted that the early bird catches the worm; the other draws, "Who, wants a worm?"

Bud was an early bird. There were extinguishing circumstances. His father, a concert violinist, had ambition for him.

At age four Bud was standing on a chair fiddling for a concert audience.

"This is a heck of a life," he mused.

He threw up the fiddle and the bow and took up sketching. He drew a horse and made seventy-five cents. Fame struck over night. His name was published as a contest winner. "That's that," said Bud, washing up art along with music.

Casting about, he decided to be a general. The reason there is another Mac wearing brass is that Bud quit military school after one year. His mother and father had been divorced and he rejoined Mom in Beaver Dam to lend support.

Soon the fury of creative energy flared again. He worked twenty hours a day in a cannery during school vacations. He canned every free-living pea from Rio Grande to Galveston, and in the process he inherited a disposition. Pea-rich Bud bought a baritone horn and next season a sax. He blew hot jazz in a five-man band. Fame struck again at sixteen when he graduated from hugh. The American Legion nailed a medal on him. He had wrapped up all the athletic and scholastic records.

With limelight hot on his tail he flew to Chicago where he found work in a sports goods department. Already six feet-three and weighing two hundred ten he was proficient in selling men's sweatshirts and hunting jackets to women who thought their husbands would look big as Bud. Without a look Bud took a set of water colors and brushes and sent him skidaddling to the big red barn on their Brentwood place. Lights have been seen burning nights. Artists are worried. They fear one of the market men will snatch their paintings to sell. Pile agents were sent sleuthing to determine whether landscapes or marines or fat nudes would be surplus.

"I haven't got going," Bud says. "I'll be downtown at red barns a long time.

He has come a long way since he scared himself to death hopping the Paramount buss for his first raise. He thought he would be rubbed out off the payroll anyhow. He faked from his boarding house and sought refuge in the apartment of Miss Lillian Lamont. She is the only girl he ever went steady with. Though beautiful and smartly fashioned Miss Lamont did not linger long in pictures.

"She looks sophisticated but she isn't," says her husband, that was her trouble.

Miss Lamont had her chance. She was tested for a star a part, a flip-flap character who was supposed to say things no girl previously said. Jean, Miss, Missouri, would say. The words would not come. Mutely Miss Lamont led herself off the lot and took a job modeling at Magnin's.

When refugee Bud appeared at her door she was on the eve of her wedding. She gave him a book to read and told him he could hole up there while she was working. The book failed to quiet Bud's nerves, so he decided to bake a pie. Culinary art was one he had mastered. The woman who ran his boarding house informed him the secret was to use little water. Bud laid it on line a teaspoon gently but then got tough. Pies got tough too. When he got around to giving them, the feather massage he turned out the flakiest crust Miss Lamont ever tasted.

"It's dreamy," she said, swooning.

She saw Bud again at a dance for Las Vegas. They were married on the wedding anniversary of Bud's parents.

The MacMurrays have a farm sixty miles north of San Francisco. In Hollywood there was in the present and in the spectacles to suit the MacMurrays. The MacMurrays own a son, whose name is Mac. The MacMurrays also have a son, whose name is Mac. The MacMurrays have a daughter, whose name is Mac. She is called Mac. The MacMurrays have a daughter, whose name is Mac. She is called Mac. They also have a daughter, whose name is Mac. She is called Mac. The MacMurrays have a daughter, whose name is Mac. She is called Mac. The MacMurrays have a daughter, whose name is Mac. She is called Mac.

"Six thousand acres?" Mac mutters. "It is only a thousand, I sold five hundred."

At the MacMurray farmhouse door the visitor probably will meet a Belgian stoll with the about that is a proven follower on the little farm of a thousand acres. Sheep gambol over pine-topped hills and level meadows and in the pastures 150 Shorthorns, with pedigrees going back to the days in which Mac also breeds quarter horses and raises 300 acres of prunes.

For six years Mac has invested all he could save out of his sixty-six cents. This year he saw a possibility.

"You don't aim to get rich any more," farmer MacMurray says. But as an early bird, before war taxes, he bought a number of farms, including a couple of thicknesses. He has a hang up over stock and sock in refrigeration and other enterprises.

He used to think he would retire and go fishing but now he is content to rest on the second floor of time for fishing between two pictures.

Claude Binyon, who wrote seven of his pictures, goes with him fishing. Mac is not a mixer. A reserve due to shyness, along with discretion, kept him on his own. The MacMurrays have not a bit of little. The Ray Milliards, Dwight Taylor's and Walter Langs are often to dinner. Mac makes a sage observation on Hollywood friendship. J. Paul Binyon is that town to keep hold of friends; they move away or get divorced, or somehow you are not thrown with them steadily.

Though calm as Buddha, Mac has his crosses to bear. The tall tales of press agents unnervr him. In "The Miracle of the Bells" he plays a press agent and the big-tale boys are ribbing him. He has to work off the play with some sequence. The press agents gleefully calculated that with all the "tales" Mac consumed twelve pies. Honest Mac quivered over this, not only because the figure wasn't strictly true but because the pies were bakers' pies—not the flaky swoony stuff of the old master.

Mac says he feels sorry for press agents working on him.

"There is nothing to write about," he says. "No one could make me colorful."

Go bake a pie, Bud.

Travis Banton who designed

Photoplay's Pattern of the Month

DREAMS OF FAIR WOMEN and makes his dreams come ture with the clothes he designs for Hollywood stars—and you

This year Travis Banton celebrates his 26th anniversary as a Hollywood designer. Now, since he is with Universal, you see such stars as Deanna Durbin, Maria Montez, Merle Oberon, Yvonne De Carlo, Joan Bennett and Susan Hayward looking even lovelier because of Banton designed clothes. And because PHOTOPLAY's pattern this month is one of these Banton designs you, too, can be lovelier. Beside his talent for making women look as they dream of looking—and he dreams of them looking—Travis has the most divine sense of humor, a fascinating wife called Biddy who wears his clothes to perfection and an apartment filled with beautiful furniture and paintings gathered from the four corners of the world.

Talking of current views on fashion, Travis says: "I'm doing practically the same length skirt that I've done for the last year—from 12 to 15 inches from the floor. I'm very fond of the unpadded Chinese kimono type coat which wraps snugly around the figure. I like normal shoulders. Evening gowns, I think, almost without exception should reach the ground. I am sick to death of ballet dancers. I like to emphasize a womanly quality."
Something new and wonderful has been added to your lingerie wardrobe—Suspants. This revolutionary pantie, made of fine soft rayon, fits like a dream with nary a wrinkle. But here's the real news—Suspants are made with four garter tabs that hold your stockings taut so you can bend and twist. They also offer plenty of figure control for gals who like the smooth sleek feeling without binding. They come in sizes 9–17 and are about $1.30.

The styles this year make your bra wardrobe more important than ever, so try on a bra before purchasing. Renée of Hollywood has designed a bra that will give you the rounded contours you need for the new tight little jackets and snug-fitting dresses. Made of broadcloth and called “Academy,” it has “balanced support” because of a special arrangement by which the shoulder straps run into and become part of the cups. The price is $2.00.

A marvelous fabric by Skinner that can be bought by the yard for home sewing is called Sunbak*. One side of this fabric, which completely eliminates interlining, is soft wool and the other is shimmering smooth satin which all adds up to warmth without weight. Just think how easy it's going to be now to make a coat, jacket or negligee that is really soft and warm. Simply line these things with Sunbak*.

Do you have a suit or dress you'd like to “dress-up” a little differently? Buy enough fabric to make collar and cuffs and then neatly fringe the edges of the fabric. A plaid set would be charming on a simple dress and you might even top the whole thing off with a small off-the-face beret in the same plaid.

Matching accessories are all the rage in Hollywood these days. So put the accent on one-color ensembles, which is the new monotonous look. This means your suit, hat, bag and gloves will all be the same color.
Highlight your natural soft beauty...

Let the lustre and moonlight glow of a strand of Deltah simulated pearls add that sought-after touch of glamour to your decollete. Its close resemblance to precious Oriental pearls will make your Deltah necklace a luxurious adornment for every costume, daytime or night. Necklace from $3.00, earrings to match.

D. P.

(Continued from page 57) such a thing as going quietly and harmlessly crazy,” June says, “and there he was, screeching like a banshee at nothing but water and wind.”

There aren't any rational grounds on which to explain men who love ocean-going sailboats, and Dick knew better than to try. So he sold the lovely Santana to Humphrey Bogart, another actor half daft with the song the wind makes in rigging. And when June protested only faintly he knew he had been right.

Dick’s a great one for tempering his course to the prevailing winds. That’s why D.P. today stands for his initials only.

You don’t have to be a dramatic war evacuee, after all, to be a displaced person. You can be one of the thousands who lose their way in the everyday business of living. As Dick did four years ago. He was fortyish. He had had his divorce from Joan Blondell. And younger crooners had shoved him off the cinematic flower-strewn paths along which he previously had wandered, singing of moonlight and love.

He could have retired, of course, and acquired a waistline and a conservative outlook on living. But he didn’t.

“That’s all right for a member of the Union League Club,” he says, “but not for me. I want to wade into life up to my armpits. I can still work fourteen hours a day and come up fresh for a spot of fun.”

Now lest you think that all this is merely a frantic clutching at the things which belong to youth, Dick’s flying instructor will tell you that he has had few students whose coordination and sense of timing were better. “The guy’s a natural,” he says. “He can put a ship down on a handkerchief and his landings are smooth as silk.”

JUNE ALLYSON came along at just the right time to be the cornerstone of Dick’s new life. For when he found he was still young enough to earn a backward glance from a twenty-two-year-old actress on whom directors were dancing in the street, he became more determined than ever to convince producers he would have greater box-office appeal as a screen menace than he had had as a crooner. Finally Charlie Koerner at RKO listened. And with “Murder, My Sweet,” Dick’s professional life became as elysian as his personal life with June had turned out to be.

Now, with three box office sensations behind him, Dick is looking into the future with a certain equanimity and assurance. He is excited about “Assigned to Treasury,” a vivid tale of the dope traffic, and in his forthcoming, “Mr. Miracle.” And he has in mind another toughie, “Pitfall,” a story concerned with a chain of events which contribute to the disintegration of a happy and successful life through a single sinister contact. This he hopes to produce himself.

“This producing thing,” he says, “now there is something. I’m not getting any younger and the time will come when I’ll have to content myself with a subtler form of self-expression—perhaps from a producer’s or director’s chair. And there’s that little consideration—money. Some very second-rate people have made a lot of it in Hollywood and I’d like to try my luck.” And so the world is wagging along at a very happy rate for Mr. Richard Ewing Powell, what with his married life with June. With his spine chillers proving completely successful. With a new boat in mind: “A good stout boat that will take you where you want to go with no nonsense about speed and grace.”

Once again Dick charts his course wisely, and, good skipper that he is, he will bring his barque safely into harbor.

Whereupon Joe would take a deep breath and go out to look for a job. And he would wear his one-piece pajama trousers with such an air that no one suspected the turmoil that went on under the pipe he carried in his breast pocket.

Another thing about Joe and Lenore: They don't compromise. There was that memorable time following Joe's first signal success on the stage in "Philadelphia Story" with Katie Hepburn, when a movie producer offered Joe a $1,500 a week, believing Lenore's diamond necklace to be within reach. Joe asked for the script. He loathed it. He told Lenore, "It has a smell of fishlike odor. And so will I if I play it."

Visions of the diamond necklace faded. Lenore still doesn't have it actually, since it never was anything more than a convenient figure of speech. These items are not the diamond-necklace type. They go in for a tennis court; such a fine court that the tennis pros make their way to it. It gets around that there are winners at a good game and observers court etiquette is welcome at the Cottens'. Rex Harrison plays there frequently. So does Joe's boss, David O. Selznick. And, almost every day Joe and Lenore play singles alone.

Joe and Lenore also go in for a good cook. The food at their intimate dinner tables—never great but large portions—passes that served in many more elaborate homes. There's just the right amount of garlic in the salad and a touch of red wine in the sauce, even if it is, as you hope it will be, having had it there before, beef stew.

They have a beautiful garden too. And Joe, when he isn't in production, works outside all day. But come dinner time, all over mud and weary from hauling rocks or building a driveway, he will shower and join Lenore on the tennis court. Often, too, between pictures they motor up to Santa Barbara and there, where motion picture stars are not generally popular, have a wonderful time.

At a recent Santa Barbara party, a music-loving hostess received music-loving guests with a pianist, cellist and flutist from one of our fine symphony orchestras. It was late when dinner was served, for one guest after another, overwhelmed with the artistry of this trio, would request one more selection.

"I enjoyed it for a few hours," Joe relates. "But I was relieved when dinner was announced. You know, therefore, when after dinner I saw the trio reassemble, and beheld Lenore with a look of enchantment making requests for the most abstract selections!

"I've never heard her go on."

But I was relieved when dinner was announced. You know, therefore, when after dinner I saw the trio reassemble, and beheld Lenore with a look of enchantment making requests for the most abstract selections!

"I've never heard her go on."

Last winter found Joe and Lenore in New York. The exteriors for the Selznick production "Portrait of Jennie" were filmed there. I didn't know Joe and Lenore had reached the end of the garden path. They were there, in the park one day. I saw a man who could be no one but Joe Cotten and a girl resembling Jennifer Jones, skating on one of the lakes.

"What in the world are they doing here?" I asked, leaving my car and walking towards them. "Singing for our supper," explained Joe, skating with Jennifer over to the bank where I stood.

It's typical of the unpretentiousness of Joe and Lenore that they did not swank in a big suite at an elegant hotel while they were in New York. It would have been no more than anyone would have expected of an actor as successful as Joe. This year, in fact, the nation-wide poll which Dr. George Gallup's Audience Research, Inc., conducted for the Photoplay Gold Medal Awards finds Joe one of the ten most popular actors in the land. But no, Joe and Lenore lived instead, downtown in the very neighborhood they knew before Joe struck it rich; in the very apartment—that of John Housman, the writer—in which Joe toiled when he was associated with Housman and Orson Welles and the Mercury Players.

"It was wonderful," Joe says, "to be back in the old neighborhood, to walk around the corner to the same grocery and lunch in the old days. And in the apartment I found all the familiar photographs and programs—all the old relics of our Mercury days."

It's typical of Joe, too, that Orson Welles remains a dear friend and a frequent and welcome visitor at his home. This, of course, is also a great tribute to Lenore. Wives so often are jealous of a man's old associations. Plainly, however, Lenore feels that it is the most natural thing in the world for Joe to continue to hero-worship Orson, even though Orson is younger than he and, despite his genius, not over-all successful. During the war, for instance, when Orson gave his circus for the GIs, Joe labored as his assistant. Irrespective of how long and hard he might have worked in the studios that day, you found him at Orson's side.

Joe and Lenore, you see, neither regret their past nor wish to forget it. They roam with laughter over the old years. They haven't lost their sense of humor. And they haven't lost their ability to dream. Mostly they dream of travel—which must wait while Joe is in this success cycle.

A realistic novelist writing a love story that began like Joe's and Lenore's inevitably would have Joe, once he was successful, forget all that Lenore had done for him and fly to the arms of a young, fluffy thing, not one-half as clever and magnetic and soigne as Lenore. It happens, however, that reality is sometimes more sentimental than realistic writers like to believe. Which brings me to my favorite story about Joe."

A few years ago, Joe, working with one of Hollywood's attractive young women, was as charmed with her as was Lenore. Outside of the studio he met this girl at several parties and danced with her. A columnist, hungry for news, promptly printed insinuating things about Joe and this young star to the press.

"The next time I see you," Joe told her over the phone, "wherever we are I intend to kick you in the customary place."

She didn't believe him; until they met at a great reception. Both, so happened, were on the dais. Nevertheless, Joe remembered his promise with action more humiliating than painful. For everyone saw it. That will teach you," he told the columnist. "And if you ever mention my name again you'll get a much harder kick—believe me!"

Obviously she did, for she has not mentioned him since. And other columnists, remembering, are wary. Lenore, therefore, is spared the hurt too many Hollywood wives know when their husbands' natural and harmless admiration for other women is exaggerated into a scandal.

My dictionary tells me a "cosmopolitan" is "a citizen of the world, one free from local prejudice or affection." But I have my own definition—Joe Cotten.
Christmas Gift

In his worn, black bag, he carried a film that had been made in China with an old-fashioned hand-cranked camera. It showed the mission, the dispensary and the orphanage. It showed natives working in the rice fields. And it showed the famine, floods and poverty. It was his hope that this film shown at parishes throughout the States would raise the funds needed for St. Columban's work to go on. He was sorry the film was so old and worn. It needed to be re-edited and brought up to date. Maybe Bing Crosby would help. Some priests he was visiting in Los Angeles had suggested his name.

But inside the studio the missionary looked at the chattering extras in their colorful costumes, at all the movie make-believe, and again thought, "How can I bring Hanyang here?" He passed the wardrobe building and entered the Crosby office next door.

BING and his brother Larry were both in. The little priest rushed eagerly into his story of the St. Columban Mission, with tense and hopeful eyes. The old reel of film was run off on a studio projection machine.

Bing watched too, his casual blue eyes, always giving no hint of his feelings.

"If only," Father Ranaghan thought timidly when the film ran its length, "I could have a new more up-to-date negative. Maybe you know someone who might possibly be interested.

"Well, Father, we should be able to knock that out for you here," said Bing.

"And I think we should put a patter of some kind with it so folks will know what it's all about."

Larry, also deeply interested in the missionary's tale, added, "Why not put the dialogue on a sound track."

"If we make a sound track for it," Bing said, "might as well throw in a musical background, too."

Father Ranaghan hadn't even hoped for this. Emboldened, turning to Bing, he asked, "And would you, as part of the background, perhaps, sing 'Silent Night'?"

Bing had always believed that sacred songs were, as he put it, "a little out of my league." But reasoning that this track would only be played in the parishes, he agreed.

The new print was made at Paramount Studios complete with commentary and musical background. The priest packed his jalopy hopefully and headed cross-country to raise funds.

It was spring before he came to Hollywood again. The hills beyond Paramount were green. Promise of new life and hope bloomed anew. "Oh, Come All Ye Faithful," he had asked. And they had answered. He called on Crosby to give him the good news.

"How much?" Bing asked, getting as usual to the important point.

The good Father named a sum far in excess of any collected before. Bing shook his head. "Not enough rice," he said. "Not nearly enough rice."

"Tell you what, Father, we might take some records off the sound track so you'll have something to sell when you pass the hat."

He had a number of recordings of "Silent Night," "Adeste Fidelles," "O-Christmas Tree," and the "St. Columban's Marching Song" taken off the track and gave them to the missionary who jubilantly headed out again with his cargo for the Cause.

It was a year and a half later, this time, before Father Ranaghan returned to Hollywood. Enthusiastic over what he had netted that trip, he again sought Bing quickly. And again, "How much?" asked Bing. The figure named, although impressive to the priest, couldn't be compared with the money possible to raise through a commercial outlet.

"Not enough," Bing said again. And anyone who knew him well could have told by his preoccupied manner that he had a plan.

He had decided to record "Silent Night" and "Adeste Fideles" for Decca Records with the understanding that his share of the royalties go to the missionary's fund. Bing always had been one of the many who are sentimental about "Silent Night." Just hearing it took him back to the days when he was a little crooner back in Spokane, brought memories of his Christmas loot, the new skates that he broke in on the lake up by the Jesuit Monastery. Of his mother's plum pudding, stuffed turkey and hot raisin bread. Of a balcony seat at the Orpheum Theatre on Christmas afternoon, walking the four miles each way from home to town so he could spend the carfare at the confectionery after the show.

He had sung "Silent Night" on school programs, in church and at neighborhood parties. And he had sung it at the Christmas clambakes at home, with his sister Catherine on the ivories, his dad accompanying on the mandolin or guitar, and the other Crosbys giving out with holiday harmony for which none of the neighbors had asked Santa Claus.

He loved to sing "Silent Night," actually. But where, he had asked himself, did a crooner get off singing Christmas carols on records or on the radio? He'd better stick to the blue of the night and gold of the day and leave religious songs for fellows with a trained "up-town voice."

But now, interested in the missionary's work, he talked himself into recording it. Folks were pretty charitable around Christmas, maybe he'd get away with it. If the Columbans could brave what they did in Korea and China, he could risk a few tomatoes singing "Silent Night."

The Irish priest was very happy. He set out with a singing heart to make another round of the parishes and add further to the fund. That was the last time Bing saw Father Ranaghan. He was killed in an automobile accident at Council Bluffs, Iowa. With his death and the Japanese invasion of China, which made communication almost impossible, Bing lost contact with the group of St. Columban's missionaries in Hanyang. Meanwhile, the royalties on every recording of "Adeste Fideles" and "Silent Night," were coming in.

"Why not just spread it around among all recognized charitable organizations," suggested Bing to Larry.

"A good idea," Larry agreed. And arranged for the royalties to go into a trustee account to be "spread around" among church groups of all denominations everywhere. That was eleven years ago.

Today "Silent Night" is the largest selling record in the world. It spreads pretty thin because of the impossible number of requests for help the Crosby office receives. Long before Christmas comes around again the fund is depleted. There's only enough for a token contribution at any time, an expression of Bing's faith in the good work being done by the various groups to help humanity . . .

It goes to Innsbruck, Austria, to help provide a cup of milk a day for 3000 school children during the cold winter months. A few rupees go to a convent in India to encourage Sisters who are rescuing Indian children abandoned in filthy market-places. Some guilders go to war-torn Holland. A token contribution goes to Franciscan Fathers for packages of food for Poland.

There are the missionaries who are caring for a group of lepers in a mud hut in South Africa. To a small group of Methodists here trying to buy an oil heater for their country church. There's that mission in Kwangtung, China, for the relief of the starving children found scrounging around in garbage pails. That hospital for poor colored children in Alabama. The Jewish Children's Hospital for under-privileged children, in Denver. And to help repair the roof of a Baptist church in Arkansas.

Today, thanks to the energetic dreams of a little Irish priest none are too far away to feel the encouragement of "Silent Night." Crosby's Christmas gift to the world. It reaches all races and religions and, at long last through Father Joseph P. Mullen, a missionary back from China, it has again reached the St. Columbans, who during the war years sheltered starving natives from the enemy, guided our troops through jungles of Burma and rescued the Doolittle Fliers and kept them in their mission at Nanchang.

Just hearing the records is a gift for the rest of us. For when Bing invites "Oh Come All Ye Faithful," our hearts lift and when he sings "Silent Night," we feel reassured that all is calm, all is bright. And we determine anew to hold on to peace on earth and good will to all men.

Be a Christmas Belle

(Continued from page 50) great delight in haunting the lingerie shops for novel and interesting bed jackets. She copied the designs, picked the colors and materials best suited to the individual women, and sewed each by hand. This was thoughtfulness which is bound to be appreciated.

Another indication of holiday, and every day thoughtfulness, comes from Joan Crawford. Joan is convinced it is never necessary to guess or ask about gifts for a friend or member of the family. She advises you to be a thoughtful listener and, without intention, they will tell you what they want or give you an idea for the ideal gift. How many times have you heard a dear one say, "Oh, how lovely! I must get that."

The next item on our list of things to do is one that can really be an expression of you—your Christmas cards and stationery. Janis Carter uses Victorian embossed cut-outs which she has found in antique shops. She places the white sides together to form a Christmas card. One year Janis used white and red ribbon for her messages. On the red ribbon she pasted gold lettering spelling out "Season's Greetings"; on the white ribbon she pasted "From Janis" in gold lettering.

AND, while you are working out the problem of what to do for others, do not neglect yourself. For this is a season of joy. Be a belle—from the top of your soft, feminine head to the tip of your subtly pointed toe.

Organize your affairs, business, shopping and social, so that the holidays don't linger in your memory as the "holidaze."

Also, it's a good idea after a day of shopping, or working at the office, to save an hour to unkink your nerves and put sparkle into tired eyes. No Christmas "belle" ever rang with fatigue.

Ella Raines has the perfect answer for relief from tension during the day. She sits in a chair, bent over slightly, allowing her head, shoulders and arms to go limp. Then she revolves her head slowly to relax nerves at the back of the neck.

A beauty mask, one of those which can be applied and removed in less than twenty minutes, goes a long way toward giving you a lovely rejuvenated look for the evening. Be sure to cleanse your face thoroughly before applying. Relax completely while the mask is drying. Wash off with cool water or remove with a mild astringent.

If you haven't time to go home from the office before going out for the evening, keep your own little beauty kit in a desk drawer as well as a few touches to dress up your outfit. A scarf tucked into the waist of a dress or your best jeweled clips or pendant earrings, will give you a fresh approach to life.

If you can afford to play "Lady Beautiful" and are thinking of giving furs, here are a few tips.

New processing and dyeing have given exquisite beauty and wearability to furs. However, if you are petite, remember that short-hair furs look best on short girls. Leave the fox and lynx for the tall, willowy creatures like Hazel Brooks. Hazel, five-seven, can wear a luxurious stole of silver fox. But a gal hugging five feet will tend to look dumpy.

But whatever you do in this season of goodwill—the old adage holds good: It is always more blessed to give than to receive.

And on this note we end our plot for a Happy Holiday to you!

THE END
A crisp catalog of the latest recorded doings of film personalities and the songs from the newest playops

KISS OF DEATH: Victor Mature earns stardom in this 20th Century-Fox gangster documentary and Alfred Newman's Manhattan mood music helps immeasurably. Les Brown (Columbia) and his orchestra disk the major theme, "Sentimental Rhapsody."

BODY AND SOUL: Three more recording favorites, Gordon MacRae (Capitol), Billie Holiday (Columbia), and trumpeter Ziggy Elman salute the new John Garfield prize-ring saga with excellent versions of the haunting melody that inspired the film title. Incidentally, MacRae is due for a picture build-up at Warners.

SUMMER HOLIDAY: M-G-M's musical version of "Ah, Wilderness" has Mickey Rooney in an appealing role and a sure-fire hit tune by Warren and Blane. It's called "Stanley Steamer" and both Dinah Shore (Columbia) and Jo Stafford (Capitol) don dusters for pleasant rhythmic rides.

DOWN TO EARTH: Columbia's technicolor splash for Rita Hayworth and Larry Parks has a winning love song called "They Can't Convince Me" which Betty Rhodes (Victor) sings convincingly.

LIONEL BARRYMORE: The veteran actor does double duty as narrator and composer of a special M-G-M album for Hallowe'en which the braver kiddies will adore. Another Metro star, Keenan Wynn, also does a favor for the younger ones as he tells on records the story of "The Bear That Wasn't There" (M-G-M).

DEEP VALLEY: This sombre Dane Clark Warner drama is considerably lightened by Max Steiner's lovely theme song. Tommy Dorsey and his fine orchestra have a slick Victor pressing of it.

IF YOU KNEW SUSIE: Eddie Cantor and Joan Davis click in this new RKO musical. The film blends old tunes and new ones. So take your "cherce," Mr. C. sings "Margie" and the title number on a Columbia re-issue, while Vaughn Monroe (Victor) and Hal McIntyre (M-G-M) play the new "My, How the Time Goes By."

FUN AND FANCY FREE: Spearheading the rash of records caused by this latest Disney feature is Capitol's album "Mickey and the Beanstalk" with Johnny Mercer as narrator and our old cartoon friends, Donald, Mickey, and Goofy, helping him out. Gene Krupa (Columbia), The Dinning Sisters (Capitol), and Phil Harris (Victor), groove the title tune. Louis Prima (Victor) and The Modernaires (Columbia) swing out the slap-happy "Say It with a Slap" while Margaret Whiting (Capitol) and Johnnie Johnston (M-G-M) prefer the dreamy ballad, "Lazy Countryside."

THE CLASSICAL CORNER: Bach dominates the serious music releases this month, with Victor responsible for the unusual album featuring violinist Jascha Heifetz playing both solo parts of the Concerto In D Minor, Columbia issuing the master's sacred arias reverently sung by contralto Carol Brice, and The Pittsburgh Symphony's capable treatment of the composer's Suite No. 2 for flute and strings. Reiner conducts and Sebastian Curteles is the flutist. Debussy's fragile Sonata No. 2 for flute, viola and harp, effectively performed by Milton Katims, John Wummer and Laura Newell, is another Columbia album for discriminating music-lovers. A record event is Victor's Wagnerian program directed by Arturo Toscanini with the NBC Symphony playing the stirring Ride of the Valkyries, Siegfried Idyll and a Faust Overture. If you like French tenors, Raoul Jobin should suit you with his Columbia collection of arias from French operas. Another in Victor's Heritage re-issue of classics of another day, is the 1907 disk of Schumann-Heink singing Donizetti's "Brindisi."
Can This Be Love?

It seems that almost a day after anyone gets a divorce or separation in Hollywood these days, he or she immediately falls in love with someone else. And real love, as I've had the happiness to know it, doesn't happen like that.

But in Hollywood, apparently, even love is different. Take Lana Turner and Tyrone Power, for instance. This fall while Ty was still married to Annabella, he and Lana threw a joint super-duper party at Mocambo with Lana named as hostess and Ty as host on the invitational telegrams! And Danny Kaye had barely moved out of his wife's house before columnists and radio reporters predicted that his next wife would be Eve Arden! And even Greer Garson. The day after she filed suit to divorce Richard Ney, Greer was having a cozy dinner in public with George Sanders!

BUT to get back to Hedy and Mark. In trying to understand their romantic interlude you should first ask two questions. Is Mark star-struck? And was Hedy unconsciously using Mark to get out of the doldrums caused by the break-up of her marriage with Loder?

I've never seen a girl so mixed up in all my years in Hollywood as Hedy was following her separation and divorce from John. It wasn't until Mark Stevens came into her life again that she snapped out of what ailed her and became the old Hedy I used to know.

Hedy and Mark first met back in 1942. Hedy Lamarr, the great beauty and star, had been loaned to Warner Brothers by Metro, to star for them in "The Conspirators." And while she was at the studio she met two men who were to become very important in her life; John Loder who had a role in a movie on the sound stage next door, "Passage to Marseilles," and Mark Stevens who had a bit in the same picture.

I remember Hedy describing that first meeting with Mark. "He was in a corner of the sound stage and no one was taking the slightest notice of him." Except Hedy. Moved by compassion—or admiration—Mark was wearing a naval uniform and it suited him—Hedy singled him out from everyone else on the set and talked to him. She talked about his ambition to be a good actor. And she encouraged him to believe in himself. You can imagine the effect this would have on a movie newcomer. Here was the most beautiful woman in Hollywood and a famous actress to boot, talking to a nonentity called Steve Richards! He worshipped her there and then. Hedy was not married. Neither was Mark but he didn't ask for a date. In Hollywood that isn't done. A bit player calling a star for a date! Too presumptuous.

And that was where Mark made a mistake because Hedy liked him—and perhaps more important, she believed in him as an actor. And when Hedy made "Experiment Perilous" she marched to the front office and demanded Mark for a big part in the picture with her. Warners refused to loan him. And shortly afterwards Mark bought off his contract. He was free matrimonially too. Then. But Hedy wasn't. The meeting with John Loder at Warners had developed into love and they had been married. Not long after, Mark married Annelle Hayes. And that seemed to be that.

But it wasn't quite. Even though she was—at that time—happy with Loder, Hedy, when she co-produced her own movie, “Dishonored Lady,” remembered Mark and again tried to borrow him for the most important man’s part in the picture—to play the one man she loved. But now Twentieth Century-Fox refused to loan Mark—he was under contract there at the time—and Heddy signed Dennis O’Keefe instead. Perhaps it was just as well for Loder also had a big role in the picture as Heddy’s wealthy admirer, and the man she hated most. Soon enough both Heddy and Mark separated from their mates and got together anyhow.

However, to the direct question “When are you getting a divorce?” Mark always replied, “I don’t know, nothing has been arranged.” Still when Heddy returned to town this state of affairs didn’t deter him from being the first man up the steps to the plane, and in full view of every reporter and photographer, he still held up on a love scene better than any either of them have ever done in their pictures!

It was this lack of reticence in their romance, of course, that made everyone wonder who it was that was the level. When people are really in love, do they pose all over the place gazing into each other’s eyes?

As Heddy and Mark did at Lake Tahoe, for instance. Even when they played golf they posed for caddies or anyone else with cameras. Whoever wanted to snap their picture could do so. And as you can see on these pages, Mark was delighted to have his picture taken with Heddy at her Beverly Hills home.

Mark’s studio did not like the resultant publicity. Neither did Annelle Stevens, as apparently she was prepared to change the suit for separate maintenance to one for complete divorce. “It’s no good,” Mark’s friends told him, “you have your baby to think about. Put a stop to this before it goes so far you can’t stop it!”

At last Mark listened and the reconciliation took place.

But Mark did not return to his home with Annelle. Instead he went into the hospital with a nervous breakdown. Annelle visited him every day.

Meanwhile, Mark has signed over all his present property and all future earnings to his wife, but has decided not to return home until he completes shooting on his picture, “A Street with No Name,” on location in Washington, D. C.

A reporter gets a little confused in Hollywood. And so would you if you had listened as I have to stars eustating over a new romance and saying “This is it” and the next day marrying someone else.

Like Heddy and Mark, For the day before he went home to Annelle, he and Heddy, holding hands, were in a trance at the Coronet. Yet in the same hour that he and Annelle reconciled Heddy said, calmly, “I talked to Mrs. Stevens on the telephone. She begged to be left alone. She was married to a lovely woman. She and Mark have a baby. I told Mark I thought he should try to save the marriage.”

Can this be love? It’s so confusing! The End
